Byrd Charges Arms Failure, Urges 'Czar' For Defense

Byrd's Protest

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, yesterday called for complete reorganization of the national defense setup under a one-man head, to overcome "miserable failure" to turn out quantity tanks, guns, combat planes and ships.

Byrd released private figures on the output of vital equipment, and vouched for their accuracy. He said he did so with regret, because they presented a "sad picture." It is imperative, he told the Senate, that the American people be informed so remedial steps can be taken.

"There must be one head of our defense program and this head should have the power and authority to give orders and enforce his decisions," he said.

"This is the first step, and in my judgment, nothing of a constructive character can be done until this head is appointed, our defense program unified and the total lack of coordination which now exists corrected."

Says Social Gains Must Yield

As Byrd told the Senate that "social gains, as everything else" must yield to the armament effort, a House Military subcommittee reported that the cost of Army housing construction has been "staggering" and the greatest single element increasing cost was lack of planning. Representative Thomason (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the subcommittee, reported that under the cost-plus-fixed fee contracts for Army construction "the incentive is actually toward extravagance."

Despite this "dark side" of the picture, the report said that from a military viewpoint the Army's construction division "has done a magnificent and unparalleled job." It said the division is taking remedial measures to cut excessive costs and provision has been made for future planning to attempt to meet needs in orderly fashion.

The House statement paralleled a report by a special Senate committee last week, criticizing the Army housing program as "unduly and unnecessarily expensive."

Urges Full Publicity

Senator Byrd pointed his sights instead at the entire armament effort and declared, "Confusion, due to conflicting and overlapping authority, exists to such a degree at Washington as virtually to stymie the whole defense program."

Urging full publicity of facts, so an "aroused public opinion" will compel a business-like administration of the program, he recommended in addition suspension by the President of the 40-hour-work week and substitution of a full week-working basis for all defense plants.

Although ten billion dollars has been spent for defense since the be-

Guns for Soldiers

AN officer at Fort Meade pointed at 29 dummy antitank guns lined up in a row.

"Look at them," he beamed. "They look almost like the real thing. We called in all the welders in the outfit and went to work and made them ourselves."

The officer noted the cynical smiles that greeted his enthusiasm.

"We've got to do something to keep the boys' chins up," he concluded, apologetically.

This incident is being duplicated every day in practically every training camp in the United States.

American soldiers simply haven't got the guns, the tanks, the planes, the equipment to make them thoroughly trained combat troops.

No official in Washington denies this condition. From every source the answer is the same: Sufficient time has not elapsed for quantity production . . . Plants are being built . . . Tools are being made . . . Plans are being changed and expanded.

Army and Government officials proudly point to the accomplishments of the past year. They call attention to the miles of cantonments, to a million and a half men in uniform, to hundreds of acres of munitions plants building.

But every current production chart today gives the lie to optimism over the progress of national defense.

THERE are leaders no man can call defeatists, who say that unless America throws itself into this picture as only America can, this country faces a Defense Dunkerque.

They say that if this Nation is lagging now, the arms deficits next year, when the program is to be expanded to staggering proportions, will be appalling.

They say there is no coordinated plan and no man with the authority to execute it, that envisions the American defense and domestic scene as an entity. In discussing this matter, practically every official in Washington concludes by pointing to reasons outside his own sphere of influence.

They say that, too often, the familiar chant "In September we will have, in December we will have, in January we will have" is whistling in the dark.

They say that aid to Britain and the lend-lease bill cannot be blamed for present deficiencies. Much so-called "aid to Britain," they say, coming from America today, originates in plants in this country paid for by England with English money, before the lend-lease bill was drawn.

They have considerable sympathy for the veteran sergeant who told a Post reporter: "The whole thing smells of France. Every politician after his bit; every brass hat looking for more red tape; every labor leader getting his cut; everybody making something, after easy money; the newspapers saying everything is lovely; and all the soldier knows is that he is in for the duration, that he hasn't got the stuff and that in the end he will hold the bag. When in hell are they going to get going and give us some guns? You can't lick Hitler with Boy Scouts."

There is enough truth in this colorful and exaggerated outburst to make any patriotic citizen pause.

WITH all due credit to the thousands of able, experienced men in the service and the allied branches of defense, who are working day and night for a properly prepared America, The Post has been exploring the detours on the Defense Road.

There are several very rocky detours.

The Post hopes that they can be blasted out so our soldiers may have guns and planes and tanks in an unending stream. Miracles will be required in some cases. But America is capable of miracles.

One thing is certain: When history appraises our effort to protect this hemisphere, the desolate, blood-chilling phrase, "too little and too late," must not appear.

Soldiers must have guns.

Gen. Fries Wins Battle of Hedges; Losses: 4 Shrubs

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, retired chemical warfare chief, has won his "battle of the hedge" with only four reported casualties.

The general is entitled to keep the main part of his 6-foot hedge and let it grow as high as he wants, according to District Surveyor Francis Healy. But four separate bushes, which occupy public space, must be clipped to meet municipal regulations, Healy ruled yesterday.

These four shrubs—two at each end—are between the main hedge and a retaining wall, and were planted on space owned by the District government, it was explained.

Windsors to Visit In Washington, Hull Reveals

Secretary of State Hull told reporters yesterday that he had learned from the British Ambassador, Lord Halifax, that the Duke and Duchess of Windsor will come to Washington on a visit they expect to make to the United States. Hull said he did not know the date of the couple's arrival.

The visit presumably will be made while the Duke and Duchess are en route to Canada next month. The Duke reportedly will visit his ranch near Calgary, Alberta.

The British Embassy said it knew nothing of the couple's plans.

Getting Nowhere Fast

Surplus Marketing Agency 'Still Studying' 5-Cent Milk

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

Still moving nowhere fast, despite persistent efforts of Acting Welfare Director Conrad Van Hyning, is the move to improve and liven up the Capital's 5-cent milk program for needy families.

Action must be taken by the Surplus Marketing Administration, Agriculture Department, to make the 11-month-old program more workable, and action is something the SMA isn't taking nowadays, at least where Washington is concerned.

"They told me yesterday they are still studying the matter," Van Hyning declared.

That is what he has been hearing for more than two months, ever since he requested the dairy division of SMA to bolster the local 5-cent quart project by making WPA workers eligible and effecting other needed reforms.

One indication of how the surplus milk distribution plan is bogging down is the fact that during the past month sales have increased only about 10 per cent, while the number of potential buyers has gone up some 40 per cent.

According to the District's surplus commodity distribution office, approximately 1000 new eligibility cards were issued last month to men and women who became eligible for nickel quarts when they were separated from WPA rolls.

Nevertheless, sales of the low-priced quarts at the 11 milk depots throughout the city are averaging only 200 to 300 bottles more daily.

War Building Site Opposed By Roosevelt

May Let Fund Lapse, Blocking Arlington Construction; Also Calls It Too Large

President Roosevelt declared yesterday that it is his present intention not to accept the mandate of Congress for construction of a 35-million-dollar War Department "dream" building on the site of the old Experimental Farm in Arlington, Va., just across Memorial Bridge.

The President says he favors locating the structure in the "Northwest Rectangle," an area planned years ago as a defense center.

Furthermore, he urged completion of the giant War and Navy Department buildings that were originally planned for that site and said he would be willing to let the Navy turn over its new structure, upon completion, to the War Department for the duration of the war.

Procedure Not Indicated

Mr. Roosevelt did not indicate how he would disapprove the 35-million-dollar appropriation without vetoing the entire seven-billion-dollar Army supply bill of which it is a part. Other officials pointed out, however, that the President could legally allow the appropriation for the Arlington site to lapse, and secure another grant from Congress to build the structure on the site he favors.

Informed officials believe the President, in signing the huge appropriations measure, will tell Congress that he will not build the new War Department building unless they eliminate from the law the requirement that it be located on the Arlington tract. Congress could make the change by joint resolution.

Years ago the Capital's planning agencies earmarked the Northwest Rectangle as the site for a 26-million-dollar building for the War Department and one of equal size for the Navy Department.

The land has been purchased and cleared by the Government. More than ten million dollars were appropriated for the War Department structures and the first unit—about one-fourth the size of the complete structure as planned—has just been finished.

Too Large, He Says

The so-called rectangle extends from Twenty-first Street for six blocks to the Potomac River, bounded on the north and south by F and C Streets, respectively.

Locking horns with Congress, where the Arlington site was approved by a margin of eight votes in the Senate, the President told a press conference that he considers the proposed Arlington building—"largest in the world"—much larger than needed.

His decision to disapprove the Arlington site is not final, the President said, announcing that he will confer on the subject today with Brig. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, chief of the construction division, Office of the Quartermaster General. The President expects Somer-

The President's Warning

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

Drawing a parallel from the words of Abraham Lincoln, President Roosevelt warned the Nation yesterday that it is not alive enough to the fact that it is faced by a war which can be won only by "hard, tough fighting" that will "hurt somebody."

And, as though to drive home his grim lesson, the Chief Executive said that the war will continue through 1943, if necessary.

The Army and Navy have been ordered to make new surveys of production capacity and of American, British, Russian and Chinese needs through 1942 and 1943, he revealed.

This was the stern message that the President gave to his first Washington press conference since his return from a meeting at sea with Prime Minister Churchill.

Quotes Message to Women

For his text, he dug from a portfolio a quotation from Carl Sandburg's "The War Years," Volume 1. It told of Lincoln's message to a group of women callers, led by Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, of Chicago.

The President had obviously been deeply impressed by the passage and had had it mimeographed for immediate distribution to reporters.

The passage follows:

"I have no word of encouragement to give!" was the slow, blunt reply. "The military situation is far from bright, and the country knows it as well as I do."

The women were silent. They knew it was a heart-to-heart talk, that he was telling them what he could not well tell the country, that he was frankly relieving the burden of an overweighted mind. It was a silence of a moment, but "deep and painful," said Mrs. Livermore.

The President went on: "The fact is the people have not yet made up their minds that we are at war with the South. They have not buckled down to the determination to fight this war through; for they have got the idea into their heads that we are going to get out of this fix somehow by strategy! That's the word—strategy! Gen. McClellan thinks

Selects, Guardsmen Affected

200,000 Out of Army by Dec. 10; Time of Service Cut 12 Months

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

The Army yesterday disclosed plans for release of 200,000 selectees and National Guardsmen by December 10 and announced that the average length of service for citizen soldiers will be 18 months, instead of the 30 months now authorized by law.

In an unexpected move which many observers linked with widespread reports of low morale in the camps, the War Department said it expects to discharge within the next three months trainees and enlisted men of the National Guard who can prove "undue hardship" in continued service, men who were 28 or over last July 1, regardless of their length of service, and married men who have completed 12 months of service.

Men not affected by these release "priorities" will be held in service an average of 18 months, the Army stated, and some will be discharged after 14 months.

Legislation signed Monday by President Roosevelt gave the Army authority to hold selectees and Guardsmen for a total of 30 months.

In revealing its intention to release the bulk of these men a year before their maximum service period expires, the War Department emphasized that its plans would require revision if the United States should become "more seriously involved in the international situation."

The announcement also pointed out that the actual service period for any individual soldier must be determined by "the location of units, their schedule of preparation and the assigned missions."

Recent legislation deferring men of 28 and more from the draft also provided for the release as soon as feasible of men now in the Army who were 28 at the time of their induction, but yesterday's statement was the first official indication that the War Department expected to make these discharges

Murphy Calls On Catholics To Back Russia

In Speech to K. of C., Justice Says Nazis Are Greater Threat

By the Associated Press

Atlantic City, N. J., Aug. 19.—Supreme Court Justice Frank Murphy told the Knights of Columbus tonight that Russia, despite its communism, should have the support of democracies in its fight with Germany.

In a speech prepared for 1500 delegates representing 419,000 members, Justice Murphy declared the Nazis constituted a greater threat to the church than did the Communists.

"For men and women who cherish freedom of religion and the other fundamentals of democratic rule," said the jurist, "there is little to choose between the communism of Soviet Russia and the nazism of Germany. We want neither in this country.

Nazis Called Real Menace

"But we know that naziism, with its superior competence and perverted intelligence, its extraordinary energy and missionary zeal, its profound belief in racial superiority and destiny, its fanatical intolerance and, above all, its tremendous military power and skill, is by far the greater menace to free nations and free institutions. It is at present the real menace."

Justice Murphy said support of Russia in its present war did not entail support of communism; that "we stand against communism, but—

"We should not permit this to blind us to our own interest and to the major fact that the great and immediate threat to our position and standing as a great Nation . . . is Nazi Germany with its inordinate ambitions, its hated philosophy and its superb military organization."

Japan Expects Crisis With U.S. Ships in Its Seas

Vessels Due to Enter Nippon's Waters in 20 Days on Way to Soviets

By the United Press

Tokyo (Wednesday), Aug. 20.—A new crisis in Japanese-American relations, which already are near the breaking point, may be expected within the next 20 days, when American "munitions ships" are scheduled to enter Japanese waters en route to Vladivostok, informed Japanese quarters said today.

The informants refused to predict that the American ships will be stopped, but added that the Government of the United States is aware that Japan is alarmed at the prospect of an American "munitions line" to the Far Eastern Soviet port.

Koh Ishii, spokesman for the government information board, said yesterday the government is "gravely concerned" over announcements in Washington of American shipments to Vladivostok. United States diplomacy toward Japan should be "more delicate," he said.

The status of Americans wishing to leave Japan, meanwhile, still was not clarified. The government

Grew's Tokyo Parley Covered Wide Range

Secretary of State Hull disclosed yesterday that Ambassador Joseph C. Grew's conversation with the Japanese foreign minister in Tokyo Monday went beyond the question of permitting American citizens to leave Japan.

Reports from Grew, Hull said, showed he had held a general conversation with the foreign minister but Hull declined to give any details.

Hull said there was no development in connection with the inability of more than 100 Americans to leave Japan.

'Bombs' Reported Found on Ship Burned in N. Y.

New York (Wednesday), Aug. 20 (AP).—Investigation of the burning of the Cuba Mail Line cargo ship Panuco and a Brooklyn pier took a new turn today with the finding of two suspicious-looking cylinders on the afterdeck of the vessel.

As the bomb squad of the New York City police investigated the objects, there were reports that one of them exploded soon after discovery.

Later, however, police headquarters said that neither of the cylinders exploded and that the bomb squad still was examining them and had placed then in a barrel of oil.

At least five persons were killed in the tragic fire which officials first said showed no signs of sabotage, and at least 72 suffered serious injuries.

Discovery of the bombs came as a board of inquiry from Washington was investigating the cause of the fire that resulted in damage estimated at more than $1,500,000.

The fireboat had been standing by the still smouldering vessel, pouring a stream of water onto it as it lay, listing to port, beached on the Red Hook Flats of New York harbor.

Yesterday firemen recovered two charred bodies from the deck of the fire-ravaged freighter.

Detroit Faces Street Car Strike Today

Detroit (Wednesday), Aug. 20. (AP). A strike of all Detroit street railway employes was ordered early today for 4 a. m. (E. S. T.) by the Amalgamated Street, Electric, Railway and Motor Coach Operators of America (A. F. L.)

The call climaxed a month-long jurisdictional dispute between the A. F. L. union and the State, County and Municipal Workers of America (C. I. O.)

The railway, whose street cars and busses transport 1,200,000 persons daily in this strategic defense center, employs approximately 7000 workers.

RAF Downs 12 Nazi Planes, Loses 15

London (Wednesday), Aug. 20 (AP). Two relays of British bombers again attacked Nazi targets in northern France last night after daylight operations in which the Air Ministry said 12 German planes were shot down and many vessels were hit at Ostend, Belgium.

One of the Nazi ships was left sinking, the communique said. The British acknowledged losing 15 planes, 3 bombers and 12 fighters in these operations.

'Return to Work at Once'

End Shipyard Strike Now, Roosevelt Asks Union, Firm

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday appealed for an immediate termination of the Nation's most serious defense stoppage, the 13-day-old strike of the Federal Shipbuilding & Drydock Co., Kearny, N. J.

It was learned that the President dispatched a letter yesterday afternoon to John Green, president of the C. I. O. shipbuilders union, asking that the 17,000 strikers "return to your work at once."

A letter similar in tone was believed to have been sent to L. H. Korndorff, president of the strike-bound yards, where work on 493 million dollars of defense contracts has been halted since August 7.

Significantly, the President's letter to Green made no mention of the public recommendations of the National Defense Mediation Board, which called on the company to grant the union's sole demand, a maintenance of membership clause in a contract with the union.

The letter read:

"The importance to national defense of the production of ships in your plant is so much greater than the point of difference between you and your employer that I am asking you both to return to your work at once.

"It is my hope that neither employes nor employers will, in the present emergency, sever the good relationship that had existed between them in the past to the detri-

8 Soviet Warships Reported Captured In Nikolaev, One Of 35,000 Tons

The Reds Fall Back

RUSSIANS ADMIT Germans drive 30 miles nearer Leningrad from south, reaching Novgorod area. Page 14.

The Nazis Drive On

By International News Service

Berlin, Aug. 19.—Germany tonight announced occupation of virtually the whole southern Ukraine west of the Dnieper River and capture of eight Soviet war vessels, including a 35,000-ton battleship, under construction at Nikolaev.

German and allied mechanized and infantry forces were said to be surging up to the great bend of the lower Dnieper in what was described as an "annihilating pursuit" of the last remnants of Marshal Semyon Budyenny's broken troops.

[The vital Black Sea port of Odessa stood under siege. Latest dispatches from the front, according to the Associated Press, reported the massed big guns of the German southern army assaulting encircled Russian troops there while the Luftwaffe ranged far over the sea approaches and the Dnieper River to prevent escapes. Germans predicted the city's fall within days, if not within hours.]

The winding east bank of the Dnieper, including the giant hydro-electric power center of Dnieprepetrovsk, was said to have come under German artillery fire from the west bank.

Advance on Leningrad

An important Soviet air base on the eastern side of the wide stream, it was announced late tonight, was smashed today by waves of Stukas that destroyed 40 parked Russian planes.

Simultaneously, German and Finnish forces at the northern wing of the 1800-mile front were reported advancing in a new pincer offensive designed to outflank, encircle and seize Leningrad, Russia's second city.

The victory in the southern Ukraine was announced in a special communique from Adolf Hitler's headquarters, listing an additional 77,750 Reds taken prisoners on Ukrainian battlefields and vast stocks of booty seized by cooperating German, Hungarian, Rumanian and Italian forces in the past ten days.

[A United Press dispatch said the total of Russian prisoners seized in the Ukraine was placed at 180,750, a figure described by Nazi spokesmen as beyond any comparison with the Germans' small losses, and it was said that the Soviet dead and wounded in the Ukraine alone probably were 1,500,000 "at a conservative estimate."]

Besides the battleship, a 10,000-ton cruiser, four destroyers and two submarines were reported captured in the Nikolaev naval shipyards.

Transports Disabled

In addition, the communique related, a Soviet gunboat was sunk and another heavily damaged.

It was understood that the Nikolaev grain elevator, one of the biggest of its kind in the world, also was found intact.

(The Soviet High Command had stated the city's docks and other works were blown up.)

The Soviet Black Sea "banner fleet" was said to be suffering mounting losses. Dive bombers already had "heavily damaged" three Soviet warships, including a heavy cruiser, and disabled nine large Russian transports, further impeding allegedly frantic efforts to stage a "Red Dunkerque" from that port.

Roberts Urges 'World Union To ForcePeace'

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 19.—Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts declared tonight that America's common aim had to be to defeat the dictatorships and then to "create a world union of self-governing peoples to guarantee and enforce peace on earth."

He said in an address at a national emergency rally at Madison Square Garden, sponsored by the Council for Democracy, that the threat of aggression was sharpened daily. He urged "a searching for the kind of world-union necessary to perpetuate world peace."

"Toil and Sacrifice"

"We believe that civilization cannot survive in a world where the right of men and women to live their lives according to their free choice is trampled under foot by autocracy or dictatorship," he said. "To a man, we subscribe to every word of the great declaration of the aims of democracy so recently made by our Presdient and the Prime Minister of Great Britain. . . .

"Day by day the threat of aggression becomes sharper. Surley we must prepare. Every hour's delay is fraught with greater danger. Now, not tomorrow, we must highly resolve to meet this threat by toil and sacrifice.

"Each of us should realize that now, not tomorrow, we must bend every effort for preparedness, if we, as a Nation, are to preserve the freedoms we now enjoy. Each day, each hour, counts; tomorrow may be too late."

Admiral Byrd Is Speaker

Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, on leave from Navy duty, made his first public address on war issues. He urged "a spontaneous reawakening of all the people, determined on unity, sweat and sacrifice, exactly as if we were fighting a shooting war . . . ," and declared that the destiny of America would be decided "by what we do in the next eight months."

"Either we become the citadel of liberty," he declared, "or we destroy the last hope of liberty."

He said that whether Hitler won or lost, America would have to realize "that the United States is an integral and responsible part of the entire world and that we can never again shirk our duty as inhabitants of this planet."

Maneuvers Short of War, Writer Finds

By Richard C. Hottelet

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the Second Army, in Arkansas, Aug. 19.—The Seventh Army Corps will commence a westward thrust as a unit late tonight when the Thirty-third, Thirty-fifth and Twenty-seventh Divisions, joined by the Seventy-fifth Field Artillery Brigade—almost 100,000 men—move forward abreast on a 30-mile front.

The Twenty-seventh Division will hold a similar position in the war games to that which it had during the World War, when its infantry units assumed defense of a sector on the left flank of the Second British Army holding the East Poperinghe Line in Belgium.

At dawn Wednesday the Seventh Corps will attack en masse in attempt to storm the Guernsey-Washington-Blevins-Wallaceburg Line in the face of enemy resistance.

The divisions Tuesday reconnoitered terrain in front of the towns, pushing weak enemy outposts before them, employing a new principle of reconnoitering for the "square" division—one with four infantry regiments.

Soldiers Stack Arms, Fight Forest Fires

With the Army in Southwest Washington, Aug. 19 (AP).—Soldiers on two battle fronts of Southwest Washington's war game stacked arms and joined their enemies today in fighting forest fires in the Oakville area, west of Tenino, and near Adna, west of Chehalis.

First actual casualties of the widespread maneuvers were reported by the State Patrol. An unidentified soldier was killed and two were hurt critically in a traffic accident near Wildwood when one reconnaisance party attempted to escape capture by another.

They Even Have Spies And Saboteurs

By Leon Kay

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the Third Army in Louisiana Aug. 19.—This "war" between the Blue and Red forces of the Third Army has many of the furbishings and undertones, if not the bloody reality, of the encounter now in progress in Europe.

There are even spies and saboteurs.

I discovered this in a small town between the Red and Blue lines. I was standing in front of a small restaurant looking over a menu posted in the window when I noticed that a young, bronzed corporal had unobstrusively stationed himself beside me.

He asked if I was enjoying the maneuvers and then in an offhand manner directed the conversation to the Red forces.

"Have you seen any of them nearby—I mean Red generals?" he asked.

At first I thought he probably was A. W. O. L. and was merely being cautious. But subsequently I noticed he had rolled up his shirt sleeve to conceal the armband that marked him as a member of the Blue forces and which under the rules he is not allowed to remove.

After a few more leading questions he borrowed a match and strolled off. I decided to follow him and saw him saunter along a side street where he went into the back parlor of a poolroom. There I observed him in close conversation with a young private.

By this time I was suspicious and challenged the corporal. Obviously disappointed that he had been discovered, he pleaded with me not to betray him.

"If the Reds capture me, especially those damned cavalrymen, they'll beat the pants off me," he said.

Tanks Not Invincible, 2d Corps Units Prove at A. P. Hill Tactics

Antitank Outfits Trap, 'Destroy' Iron Monsters

By Marshall Andrews

Post Staff Writer

Fredericksburg, Va., Aug. 19.—A. P. Hill Military Reservation—With flame and steel and smoke and infinite dust, antitank units of the Second Army Corps proved a few things here today.

They proved tanks are rough. And they proved that tanks can be stopped if all arms aground and in the air will bend their efforts to the task.

Infanry, artillery, cavalry, air corps all played out their part in the most pressing problem of modern defense warfare before more than 6,000 officers and men headed by commanders of the Second Corps and its three divisions. And the tanks had an answer to each of them.

But when all arms worked together in a coordinated effort to block them, the iron monsters were baffled, beset from all sides, clasped in a web of death and destruction.

Tonight, after ranking guests saw a demonstration of the Army's secret new antitank guns on mobile mounts, the Seventy-first Coast Artillery (antiaircraft) showed how sound devices and searchlights may be used in antimechanized defense.

First crack at the tanks was given to the Second Battalion, Fifth Engineers, of Fort Belvoir, who demonstrate various explosive devices such as mines, torpedoes and a hot volcano of flame and smoke they called a "Flash Gordon." Then the three tanks took over the job of making their way through obstacles consisting of an "asparagus bed" of logs planted in the earth, a broad ditch with an easy approach and a row of wooden horses made of logs.

Over on the left a tank soon was headfirst in the ditch, stuck there to be drilled by antitank guns. In the center a tank plowed into the asparagus bed, hung there wreathed in blue smoke, its treads crawling in empty air. Backing, weaving and charging ahead again, it filled the air with the clamor of its engines and the crackling of shattered logs until suddenly it broke free.

The tank on the right gave the spectators a show that left them limp with fear, then sent them to their feet cheering in most unmilitary manner.

It charged straight for a cloth screen set up to hide the wooden horses, ripped it aside and impaled itself on the obstacle.

Not halting or slowing, it slithered up the sloping approach to the horses. There it waddled crookedly, slipped almost to its side, then dropped off on one tread and slammed back to an even keel.

Free of the obstacle, it veered to the right and sped across the front of the grandstand straight into a mild-looking contraption set up for a later demonstration by the chemical warfare service. The thing flared up and wrapped the gas-filled tank in flames. With fire clinging to its sides and racing round with its treads, the tank emerged from the blazing trap. While spectators waited for the explosion that would have burned to a crisp its entire crew, the driver swung into a sand bed, and without slackening speed weaved through until the sand smothered the fire.

Air Corps and Antiaircraft Artillery put on a joint show when the open ground and its network across roads suddenly swarmed with trucks and guns. For five minutes lines of racing vehicles wove through each other in an impossibly intricate pattern. Then suddenly the field was clear again except for new clumps of trees and brush which unexpectedly had sprung up among the permanent landscape. Under these new growths lurked men with 3-inch guns, with heavy machine guns, with quick-firing 37-millimeter guns. Then the planes came down, diving over the hill where the spectators sat and into the bowl below. The newly risen thickets dissolved and the guns were bared blazing away at the planes.

Ground Swarms With Troops

This afternoon at the blast of a whistle, the ground which appeared completely bare suddenly swarmed with life and action. Men leaped from fox holes and threw aside the camouflage which had blended their guns with the earth.

Tanks, reinforced by armored cars, moved out on the field and the guns were turned against them. When a tank would charge a gun, its crew would disappear in their holes, then reappear to go into action when behind the tanks. Pressing through the first line of guns, tanks were met by a second line, which held them up until they radioed for help from the air, just as the Germans did in France, and the dive-bombers came and softened the resistance until the tanks could forge ahead.

One after the other, regimental, division and corps antitank units, 37's and 75's and 50 caliber machine guns were thrown as the tanks bored deeper. Finally, when the tanks were far inside the defending line, under fire from front, flank and rear, tank destroyers came out and blasted at them with 37-millimeter guns mounted on trucks.

Byrd Charges Arms Failure, Urges 'Czar'

ginning of the European war, Byrd said "so far not a single antiaircraft gun or tank has gone to England, and very few merchant ships."

In the various arms categories, he gave the Senate the following information on American defense production. He said it is "accurate in all essentials" though approximate in some minor details.

Tanks. After two years, tank production is "practically negligible."

Antiaircraft guns. Only about a dozen 90 M-M guns have been delivered and these are for experimental purposes. This is the only antiaircraft gun on order which will pierce the new armor and adequately attack high-flying bombers.

The Navy. Has about 323 major naval vessels, "the best one-ocean Navy in the world," but now need two-ocean Navy of at least 700 major vessels. This not in sight until 1946, unless extraordinary speed-up takes place.

Merchant ships. For the entire year of 1941, only 105 merchant ships and tankers will be built, hardly more than gross sinkings by the Germans in one of the heaviest casualty months.

Claims Plane Output Off

Planes. July production of military planes declined under May and June. Half of 1460 produced in July were training planes. Of the 700 combat ships, less than 300 were bombers of all types. Production of long-range bombers does not exceed 60 per month.

Other vital equipment. Only about 100 M-M howitzers will be produced this year. The 37 M-M antitank guns will be produced only at the rate of 15 a month. Only 15 of the 80 M-M mortars will be produced in the immediate future. No 155 M-M guns will be produced in 1941.

Byrd told the Senate that selectees being trained in the camps lack essential military equipment; that "there is not a single camp today anywhere in this country which has adequate military equipment for training purposes."

One of the most serious obstacles to the program, he said, had been strikes in defense industries. On War Department contracts, 2,950,700 man-days were lost through strikes from January 1 to August 12, while 2,151,000 man-days were lost on Navy Department contracts in a similar period, he said.

"There must be stoppage of strikes in defense production and the removal of every present obstacle to defense production, whether it is red tape or inefficient bureaucracy, or the refusal of business enterprise to cooperate," the Virginian declared.

Army to Send 200,000 Home By Dec. 10

before Christmas.

Releases will be made at a uniform rate, so as not to lower the efficiency of units in the field, it was stated. Except for hardship or "emergency cases" men will not be released while their units are on maneuvers or engaged in special training exercises. The bulk of the 200,000 men eligible for early release will be discharged between mid-October and December 10, it was indicated.

The autumn releases will be granted only on application to their commanding officers by men eligible under the Army "priorities" schedule.

Enlisted men of the Regular Army who complete their three-year term of service before next December 1 will be discharged unless they seek reenlistment, the department announced. The Service Extension Act would have permitted retention of these men for a total service of 4½ years.

Enlisted men, selectees and Guardsmen who desire to serve after they become eligible for release must demonstrate "an ability which would warrant their appointment as non-commissioned officers" or possess specialist training.

The Army announcement pointed out that about half the Reserve officers now in service will be released from active duty after 12 months and that a similar schedule is being prepared for National Guard officers.

Disclosure that most selectees and Guardsmen will serve no more than 18 months was seen here as assurance that the rotation of training principle underlying the original Selective Service Act would be maintained.

Opponents of the service extension bill argued during the Congressional debate that the legislation would "freeze" the present personnel of the Army.

In another step which may have reflected concern over reports of dissatisfaction in the ranks, President Roosevelt yesterday nominated a civilian, Frederick H. Osborn, to be brigadier general in command of the Army morale branch.

Osborn, who is 52, has been a corporation executive and sociologist and has been prominently associated with various philanthropic activities. He has served since January as chairman of the War Department Committee on Education, Recreation and Community Service.

He succeeds Brig. Gen. James A. Ulio. Gen. Ulio, it was stated, will soon enter Walter Reed Hospital to undergo an operation which is expected to keep him from active duty for several months.

Conflicting Plans For Tax Bill Aired

King's Cousin Arrives in U. S.

LORD AND LADY MOUNTBATTEN, as they arrived at New York yesterday aboard the Dixie Clipper. Mountbatten, a cousin of King George VI and commander of two destroyers sunk in action against the Axis, came to "take command of a warship which you very kindly repaired for us." Business Groups Ask Senate to Lower Income Exemptions

By the Associated Press

Spokesmen for two major business organizations asked lower income tax exemptions and enactment of sales or other new levies yesterday, while an official of the National Lawyers' Guild contended that the bulk of new revenues should come from excess profits and larger incomes.

These contrasting revenue-raising programs were submitted to the Senate Finance Committee during hearings on the $3,236,700,000, House-approved tax bill.

Witnesses for the business groups were Livingston W. Houston, chairman of the Government Finance Committee of the National Association of Manufacturers, and W. J. Schieffelin, jr., chairman of the taxation committee of the New York State Chamber of Commerce. The Lawyers' Guild was represented by Martin Popper, of Washington, national secretary.

Contending that excise levies proposed in the House bill constituted a "hodge-podge," Schieffelin asked the committee to approve either a retail sales tax or a tax on all gross incomes paid out to individuals, the tax to be collected at the source without exemptions.

In addition, he recommended that individual income tax exemptions be decreased, that the normal tax on individual incomes be raised from the present 4 per cent to 6 per cent and that the capital stock tax and related declared value excess profits tax on corporations be abolished, with an increase in the normal corporation rate from 24 per cent to not more than 30 per cent.

The House bill, he asserted, could "neither prevent inflation or maintain the Nation's credit unimpaired."

Houston told the committee that "we have skimmed most of the tax cream from the fairly well-off income groups."

He recommended increases in the normal rate on individual or corporate and normal income tax rates, a decrease in individual income tax exemptions and credits and enactment of "a form of general sales tax."

San Carlo to Give 'Aida' Tonight At Watergate

The opera "Aida" will be performed tonight at the Watergate by the San Carlo Opera Company, if weather permits. Last night the double bill of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci" was postponed because of rain and will be given Friday night.

Last night's performances were originally scheduled to be the finale of the summer opera season here but weather interference has made it necessary to continue the program through completion. The remainder of the program will be:

Tonight, "Aida," postponed last Friday; Thursday night, "Il Trovatore," postponed Monday; Friday night, "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci." All performances begin at 8:15 p. m.

The board's second call for September will be for 20 men leaving on September 15 for the Baltimore induction center.

Confederates Plan Another Reunion

The United Confederate Veterans expect to hold another reunion after all. Miss Martha Norris McLeod, a member of the staff of Gen. J. F. Howell, commander in chief of the veterans, said last night the reunion will be held at Chattanooga, Tenn., sometime next spring.

She said Gen. Howell advised her by letter from his home at Bristol, Va., of plans for the meeting and asked her to make the announcement.

Kirk Indicted In Woman's Traffic Death

James H. Kirk, 35, of 4917 Forty-fourth Street Northwest, was indicted on a charge of manslaughter in the District Court yesterday, as a result of a traffic accident.

Crossing Georgia Avenue near Aspen Street Northwest on July 9, Mrs. Anna Minor, 39, of 922 Sheridan Street Northwest, was struck down by an automobile and died shortly afterward. Police reported that Kirk was driving the car and that he was drunk when they arrested him.

The indictment accused Kirk in one count of general negligence and in another of drunken driving.

Accused of assault with intent to rape was Aubrey B. Duncan, 22. An 18-year-old girl claimed Duncan took her into the bushes near the Sylvan Theater the night of August 3 and struggled with her for several hours. A gardener answered her call for help at 6 o'clock the next morning.

The indictments were among 30 presented to Justice David A. Pine.

ment of the national welfare. I hope, therefore, that you and Mr. Korndorff will talk this over today. If I can help further, let me know."

At his press conference, the President said Green and Korndorff were conferring on the problem yesterday. Green, however, declared that no meetings were held, but that he expected to confer today, along with a committee of the striking union local.

Involved in conference yesterday with Korndorff, however, was Myron C. Taylor, former chairman of the board of United States Steel Corporation, corporate parent of the Federal Shipbuilding plant. The participation of Taylor, who is Mr. Roosevelt's special representative to the Vatican, was believed to be at express Presidential request.

Taylor declined to comment on the progress of discussions, declaring that such matters "took time." He admitted, however, that it was a hopeful sign that Green and Korndorff, the principals in the dispute, were to confer directly after a previous breakdown in personal negotiations.

Other labor developments yesterday:

After a riotous "protest work stoppage" Monday night by the C. I. O. Steel Workers Organizing Committee at the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s Sparrows Point pipe and wire mills, near Baltimore, production proceeded normally on the day shift.

An estimated 20 company police and workmen were injured, a dozen auto windows were smashed and eight men were arrested in picket line clashes. According to union spokesmen, the stoppage was a protest against "various kinds of intimidation and threats to union men."

The Labor Department certified to the Mediation Board the month-old strike of C. I. O. United Auto Workers at the American Car & Foundry Co., Chicago.

William Green, A. F. of L. president, speaking at the New York State Federation of Labor convention, asked that a "ninth point" be added to President Roosevelt's and Prime Minister Churchill's peace aims—that in postwar conferences, labor be represented at the council table.

Green also cited figures to show that only seven one-hundredths of 1 per cent of man-hours had been lost in defense industry through strikes.

Richard Frankensteen, director of the C. I. O.-U. A. W. aircraft division, threw a wrench into OPM plans for a West Coast aircraft industry stabilization agreement by walking out of the conference after a session of only 10 minutes. He said he was "not interested in a joint agreement with the A. F. of L. and independent workers to stabilize wages and working conditions.

At Michigan City, Ind., a strike of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen took about 1800 workers from their jobs at the Pullman Standard Car Manufacturing Co. The union demanded that the company complete a contract providing a modified union shop.

Hundreds Picket Store

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—Busy Herald Square, home of three great department stores, was thrown into some confusion today when hundreds of union demonstrators threw a picket line around Gimbel's.

Nine pickets were arrested and released in $200 bail each as a score of mounted policemen and nearly 100 other officers were called into service to keep the demonstrators orderly.

Gimbel's huge store, in the same square as Macy's and Saks' Thirty-fourth Street marts, where tens of thousands of persons shop daily, remained open during the demonstration.

There was no general disorder.

Ballet Dancers Look Forward To Show Tonight at Watergate

Potomac Setting For Performance Termed 'Poetique'

A White Russian army colonel, now director of the Russian ballet, his prima ballerina, also Russian, and an 18-year-old French dancer yesterday expressed enthusiasm at the prospect of the ballet's performance at Washington's Watergate. Washington is like prewar Paris and the Watergate is a setting "poetique," they said.

The 65 dancers of the ballet will put on their opening performance Saturday and will dance nightly through August 29.

Col. Wassily deBasil, who saw considerable fighting in Persia in 1916-17-18, said it was not unusual for Russian soldiers, at least of his era, to be dancing enthusiasts.

Started at 13

Blonde Tatiana Riabouchinska started dancing when she was 13 and joined the present company when it started.

Miss Riabouchinska says ballet dancing is terrifically hard work, but with compensations. Each day for every ballerina there is a one-hour lesson, then some 12 hours of rehearsing.

She goes to bed around 1 a. m., rising seven hours later to repeat the process.

"It is not easy, but when the performance starts it is wonderful; when you dance you forget all your troubles," she declared.

Girl's Mother in Paris

One of the "babies" of the ballet is Genevieve Moulin, a pretty blonde of 18 years, and only two years away from her native Paris.

Mlle. Moulin expressed joy over having hear from her mother recently. But, the mother, who is still in Paris, relayed an account of being near starvation through the general lack of food.

She has been unable to send her mother money or food because "everything is stopped at the frontier."

But after the war, "I will go home immediately," she said.

New Table Lets Roosevelt See All His Cabinet

The White House acquired a new Cabinet table of unusual shape yesterday, designed by its donor, Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce and Federal Loan Administrator.

The new mahogany table, a gift from Jones, has an octagonal shape so that no Cabinet member will have to crane his neck to see a colleague at the other end. It replaces an old rectangular table.

The new table is so designed that the President can sit in the middle, see each member of his Cabinet and address the group without raising his voice. At the old table he sat at one end, a full 20 feet away from the official at the opsite end. The new table will be used for the first time Thursday.

U. S. to Force Disney Strike Arbitration

The United States Mediation Service declared yesterday that it would immediately "take steps to see that an arbitration award is completely complied with," in order to settle a labor dispute at the Walt Disney studio in Hollywood which was shut down Monday.

Company officials declared that the closure was forced by refusal of the A. F. and L. Screen Cartoonists Guild to approve the selection of employes whose layoffs are necessitated by curtailment of the studio's production, badly hit by loss of foreign markets.

A spokesman of the Walt Disney Productions, Inc., told The Post that the union had also declined to accept a company offer to subject the layoffs to the rule of an arbitrator, and to reinstate, with back pay, any employes whose discharges were ruled to have been discriminatory. Refusal of the union, he added, necessitated shutting down the "Mickey Mouse factory," which employs more than 1000 people.

Decline to Assess Blame

Conciliation officials yesterday declined to assess blame in the long standing dispute, which led to a strike throughout July and part of August. They declared, however, that neither side had showed good faith in bargaining, and that the company's labor policy appeared to have been "misguided."

They also explained that the strike was settled two weeks ago by an arbitrator's award, which provided wage adjustments, a closed shop and a provision that future layoffs be submitted to a union committee and that if the selection was not approved, the names be referred to an arbitrator.

The company's proposed layoff list, it was added, contemplated the discharge of four union men for every nonunion employe.

The company, on the other hand, declared that there could not be any discrimination, since all employes, under the award, were to become union members. They added, however, that through exorbitant initiation fees and other conditions, nonmembers were barred from joining the guild.

Adjustment Made

Federal conciliators explained, however, that this matter had been adjusted last Thursday and that the restrictive initiation provisions had been "droned out."

The company statement to The Post declared: "The real issue now is the right of the studio to select personnel which in its belief is best suited to carry on our production . . . The union continues to make every effort to force their selection of personnel on the studio."

Federal mediators explained that the company has contended it must select its employes on the basis of artistic and creative merit and that its layoffs are determined by these standards. The union, they added, has declared that the bulk of the employes, paid from $22 to $28 a week, are tracers, colorers, "inkers-in" and the like, whose jobs are almost mechanical, and that seniority should be the basis of the layoffs.

During the course of the dispute an agreement was negotiated with the company by "Willie" Bioff, notorious labor figure in the motion picture industry. The guild declined to agree when Bioff's participation was revealed.

Man Plunges To Death From Calvert St. Bridge

A man tentatively identified by police as Orion Logue, 712 E Street Northeast, plunged to his death from the Calvert Street Bridge last night.

He was pronounced dead by Dr. C. H. Haynsworth, of Emergency Hospital. The body was removed to the District Morgue.

O. W. Page, 3100 Connecticut Avenue, and I. R. Whiteman, of Falls Church, Va., were parked in an automobile beneath the bridge as the man struck the creek bottom. They notified Park Policeman A. S. Morean, who called the hospital ambulance.

Chinquapin Group to Meet on Rents

Members of the Chinquapin Village Civic Association, composed of families residing in the Navy's new low-cost housing development on King Street Road, Alexandria, will meet this evening at 6 o'clock to map further steps in connection with their protest against a revised rental schedule recently announced by the Bureau of Yards and Docks. A committee of four appointed ten days ago to convey the protest to naval officials is scheduled to report on the progress of its negotiations.

The occupants, all families of naval torpedo factory workers, have protested aginst the bureau's action in reducing rents an average of $3 a month while requiring the residents to pay the cost of all gas, electricity and water used. The rent reductions, they charge, are out of proportion to the increased cost of utilities, which they claim will amount to nearly $20 a month for each home.

Roosevelt Tells U. S. to Expect Long, Hard War

he is going to whip the Rebels by strategy; and the Army has got the same notion. They have no idea that the war is to be carried on and put through by hard tough fighting, that it will hurt somebody; and no headway is going to be made while this delusion lasts."

Asked About A. E. F.

The President was prompted to read the quotation when a reporter asked if Churchill was confident of winning the war without an American expeditionary force.

Mr. Roosevelt declined to answer the question, calling it too headliney, and then read the excerpt from Sandburg's Lincoln.

After reading it, he looked up and said that Lincoln had acknowledged the fact that the country had not waked up to the reality of a war with the South.

Another questioner, mindful that Congress, by only a one-vote margin, had approved extension of military service while the President was away on "vacation," asked:

"Would that narrow vote on the draft bill indicate there are people like that now?"

The President replied that he thought there were a great many people who have not made up their minds about the war.

"President Quotes Lincoln"

Then other newsman, recalling that sometimes the President has suggested to reporters what emphasis he would place on an account of his press conferences, asked:

"If you had to write the lead for that story, what kind of a lead would you write?"

"I would say, 'President quotes Lincoln and draws parallel,'" said Mr. Roosevelt.

He granted permission for direct quotation of the remark, a privilege he sometimes allows in order to emphasize a point.

Asked how broad a parallel he meant to draw, he said it applies to the world today, and certainly to the United States.

Eyes on Far Horizons

Fresh from his historic conference with Churchill, the President was not in a mood for questions on the daily grist of nominations to Government jobs, fights within the defense structure and similar topics of Washington speculation. His eyes were obviously on far horizons.

He read a portion of a letter received from an old friend, saying it would be good for their souls.

The letter told the President he had made history in the Atlantic, that he and Churchill had realized hopes, dreams and endeavors by the mere fact that they met and exchanged views.

The missive from the old friend said it was a fine thing that cheap journalists had not obscured the importance of the conference and that releases and pictures relating to the meeting were the merest trivia.

Fine Spirit, He Says

The letter showed a fine spirit, the President remarked.

Quickly, a reporter asked: "Who will determine what is trivia."

The President said with emphasis that the reporters would make the decision. The interchange was interpreted to mean that the President would rather not be besieged at press conferences with questions that he would characterize as trivial.

Of the meeting with Churchill, still partly shrouded in secrecy, the President said that the whole idea of his leaving the country without informing the press of his destination was inspired by concern for Churchill's safety.

Churchill, on the other hand, maintained secrecy because of concern for the President's safety, said Mr. Roosevelt.

Secrecy Agreed On

There was an agreement between the two men, said the President, to keep the meeting secret.

Commenting on newspaper treatment of the meeting, Mr. Roosevelt said that he had no objection to the majority of newspaper stories that were based frankly on guesses that the two statesmen were meeting. These stories, said Mr. Roosevelt, never asserted that the two men were actually meeting until the formal announcement was made, but merely surmised it from a mass of circumstantial evidence.

The exact location and time of the meeting, however, will not be given out until the end of the war, said Mr. Roosevelt, explaining that due to several scientific technicalities having to do with radio, valuable information might get into German hands if these details were revealed now.

In view of the accurate press accounts of the meeting, said Mr. Roosevelt, he does not consider it necessary to report to the country by radio about his talks with Churchill.

Earlier yesterday the President lunched with Lord Beaverbrook, British Supply Minister, and they discussed the new surveys of military supplies and requirements.

The President said that he and Beaverbrook had considered a new survey of needs that the United States and the British governments are compiling, to replace estimates drawn up a year ago.

When these are ready, he said, the British and American as well as the Russian and Chinese demands will be totaled.

U. S. Planes Sped To Meet Nazi Black Sea Threat

By the United Press

American war planes are being rushed across the South Atlantic to strengthen British Middle East forces in anticipation of a German "atonement" campaign in the southern Black Sea area this winter, competent military authorities said last night.

The Nazi thrust, either in the direction of Baku or Mosul oil fields, will be attempted in an effort to achieve a victory that will minimize the German failure to subjugate Russia, the informants said. The United States and Britain meanwhile are speeding vast military supplies to the Russian battlefront in the hope that the Red armies will stall the German war machine until the winter sets in.

Bulgaria Uncovers Anti-Nazi Ring

Sofia (Wednesday), Aug. 20 (AP).—Police announced today they had uncovered an anti-German spy and sabotage ring operating in the Black Sea region headed by Anton Proudkine, one of the most colorful of Balkan figures.

Proudkine has been a poet, writer, sea captain, fisherman and once headed the Sofia police force. Nearly 20 years ago he was sentenced to death on charges of blowing up a Sofia theater for political reasons. King Boris later commuted his sentence to a prison term. Whether he is now under arrest was not made known.

Mexico Gives U. S. Nazi Party Rolls

Mexico City, Aug. 19 (AP).—Secret membership rolls of the German Nazi party in Mexico have been obtained by the United States Embassy and are being used as a guide for Washington's economic offensive against pro-Axis interests here, an authoritative source stated tonight.

This source said possession of the party rolls would help smash Nazi power in Mexico. Party members, as well as any firm hiring them, will be subject to President Roosevelt's recent export ban, it was asserted.

Farmers Oppose Price Ceiling

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—Opposition to any move to place a ceiling over the prices of farm products until agriculture is "on an equal footing with industry and labor" was expressed today at a meeting of farmers and representatives of farm groups from 30 States.

The conferees, at a parley called by the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation, also took a stand against rigid price fixing under any conditions.

The delegates, in a series of resolutions they adopted, outlined their policies in the light of the defense program and related developments.

Japanese Expect Crisis With U. S.

spokesman said that Americans may leave Japan "only if the Japanese government gives permission" and added that applications will be considered "case by case."

He accused the American Embassy of breaking its "promise" that only 22 American officials would leave this country on the American liner President Coolidge when it was proposed last week that the vessel call at Japan after leaving Shanghai. The foreign office had agreed to let 22 American officials leave, Ishii said, but rejected an added proposal of the embassy that more than 100 American civilians also be allowed to depart.

It was understood that a small number of Britons were seeking to leave Japan but were confronted with the same difficulties that Americans were experiencing.

The government up to yesterday had issued permits to six American officials to leave Japan for Shanghai.

Any American ships calling at Japan henceforth will be treated the same as the Japanese liner Tatuta Maru and other Japanese ships were treated in American ports, the spokesman said, adding that American ships have not been calling here because it was "economically unprofitable."

British May Resume Trade With Japan

London, Aug. 19 (AP).—Britain is setting up machinery for possible continuation of trade with Japan, an authoritative source disclosed tonight.

The new plan involves an arrangement to place payments for any imports from Japan in a "clearing account" which could be used to finance licensed exports to Japan.

Roosevelt Opposes War Department Building Site in Arlington

vell to present the other side of the argument to aid him in deciding what action to take on the War Department Appropriation Bill.

The President said amiliingly that he hurt his chances of getting into heaven by sponsoring construction of the temporary Navy structure on Constitution Avenue in World War days, and now he wants to square himself with the divine authorities by having the temporary buildings torn down during his Administration and by preventing construction of the proposed Arlington "dream building."

The chief objection to the Arlington site, said the President, is that location of the building there would interfere with an unobstructed view of Arlington Cemetery and the Lee Mansion, and would spoil the plan of the National Capital for 100 years.

His disapproval of the Arlington site for the War Department should be of interest to the country at large, not only to Washington, said Mr. Roosevelt.

He told of expressing a fear in 1933 that he would not get into the gates of Heaven because he was responsible for descerating the parks of Washington.

Explaining the statement, the President said that he was personally responsible for construction of the Navy's temporary building on Constitution Avenue during the World War. The site fringes Potomac Park.

Mr. Roosevelt told of discussing the matter with President Woodrow Wilson, who asked him why he chose the Potomac Park site.

His reply, said Mr. Roosevelt, was that the structure would be so unsightly there in front of the White House that it would have to be torn down after the war.

Wilson objected that he would not be able to stand the sound of hammering, but Mr. Roosevelt insisted on the Potomac Park site, so Wilson finally assented.

It was a crime to follow that up by locating the Munitions Building next door, said the President.

Humorously, he said he does not see why he should be barred from Heaven for descerating the loveliest city in the world, making it plain that he intends to prevent location of the new War Department building on the Arlington site.

The Congressional plan for the Arlington site descerated the National Cemetery and the old Lee Mansion, both nationally beloved and frequently visited by throngs of tourists, said the President.

He spoke with feeling of the thousands of tourists who now enjoy an unobscured view of the landscape in Arlington from the District side of the river. Construction of the proposed building there would spoil the plan of the National Capital for a century, the President remarked.

Quite apart from such questions as transportation and housing in connection with the Congress-approved plan, the President said he wanted to avoid spoiling the Capital's parks again.

The Washington Building Congress placed itself on record yesterday against the Arlington site.

In an open letter to Mr. Roosevelt, signed by James R. Skinker, president, the congress asked that planning for the Capital be kept in the hands of the authorized planning agencies.

Mixed with mayonnaise or French dressing, it bestows flavor as rapturous as if a whole platoon of chefs had collaborated.

Churchill Tells War Cabinet of Ocean Parley On Return Home; Will Speak on Radio Sunday

Delivers Letter From Roosevelt To King George

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 19.—Wreathed in smiles and cigar smoke, Prime Minister Churchill returned today from his historic Atlantic conference with President Roosevelt and in short order did all these things:

Told the War Cabinet about the meeting at sea and the agreement to speed the war of extermination against Nazism;

Arranged to tell the public about it in a radio address next Sunday (3 p. m. Washington time).

Went to see a movie of the conference;

Had luncheon with King George and gave him a personal letter from Roosevelt.

When he bounded off the train which brought him home, high military officials and cabinet members were waiting on the platform, as were several hundred ordinary citizens.

United States Ambassador John G. Winant tried vainly to get through. Mrs. Churchill, gay in a purple suit and gray furs, greeted her husband with:

"Mr. Winant is here."

Churchill, puffing his big cigar like a destroyer under forced draft, elbowed through to greet the Ambassador. In passing he commended A. V. Alexander, first lord of the admiralty, for the navy's handling of the Atlantic voyage.

A trainload of commuters recognized Churchill.

"Three cheers for Mr. Churchill," cried a dignified old gentleman in a wing collar.

Waving, nodding and laughing, the prime minister seized his wife's arm and bounded up the platform at the head of a milling procession.

Incidentally, his tobacconist disclosed today Churchill had declined to buy a lot of 600 of his favorite brand of cigar because he refused to hoard, even though the supply is running low. Instead, he bought the usual 25. They cost about 60 cents each.

It was disclosed that Capt. Elliott Roosevelt, who attended the conference as a military aide to his father, had arrived in London. It was not disclosed whether he came on the Prince of Wales or flew here.

It previously had been reported that another son of the President, Ensign Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., had visited Iceland with Churchill aboard the Prince of Wales, but Franklin's present whereabouts remained undisclosed.

Prof. Philip C. Jessup, of New York, and Hugh Davies, of Harrisburg, Pa., the only North Americans on board, reached a Sao Paulo suburb late today along with David Novak, the plane's steward.

Novak said he, Jessup and Davies got out of the wreckage and after trying to save the others wandered most of the night through the forest.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Aug. 19.—An artifical leg for Wing Commander Douglas R. Bader, legless Royal Air Force pilot, who smashed his right metallic leg after bailing out of his plane over the continent a week ago, was dropped by parachute from an R. A. Arrangements were made through the International Red Cross to ferry a spare leg across the Channel.

The label on the package containing the new leg requested that it be sent as quickly as possible to Bader at his prison quarters.

Bomb 'Strips' Skipper

London, Aug. 19 (AP).—The captain still stood on the bridge after a German air bomb hit his merchantman—but the blast stripped him down to only the waistband of his trousers, the sleeves of his jacket and his socks.

That was only the first bomb. The second, another direct hit, sank the vessel but the captain survived.

The captain, quoted by the ministry of information today, said that after the first blast his machine-gunner crawled out of the debris on the bridge "and asked me if I was all right."

"The next thing I knew," he said, "the water was over the bridge rail and up to my chin. I floated away from the ship as she sank."

Except for loss of clothing, and dignity, the captain suffered only head cuts and bruises.

Petain Acts to Crush Foes of Collaboration

By Ralph E. Heinzen
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Vichy, Aug. 19.—Marshal Petain today called for a showdown with his political foes, many of whom are under arrest, and announced measures to crush opposition to his authoritarian French regime which is moving toward closer "collaboration" with Germany.

"The time for hedging is past . . . a decision must be taken . . . either one is for me or against me," said the aged chief of state in a speech at Royat marking an oath-taking of all public officials to support his policies.

Determined to wipe out admitted hostility the government simultaneously prepared to announce "extremely severe measures" for the crushing of Communists who are opposing the Vichy government's negotiations with Adolf Hitler.

Police at Marseille, it was revealed, have arrested 21 including the staff of a clandestine weekly newspaper, the Rouge Midi.

The oath-taking by seven members of the Council of State was the first application of Petain's new procedure whereby Vice Premier Admiral Darlan, all the other cabinet members, all magistrates, military leaders and high civil servants must swear "fidelity to the person of the chief of state" and "promise to exercise my charge for the good of the state according to the laws of honor and loyalty."

These pledges replaced the old oaths to the now-shattered third Republic of France.

Petain in his speech to the Council of State at Royat said he was anxious to surround himself with councilors and advisors and that, although he held full powers, it was up to the council to "make suggestions, shed light and assemble materials harmoniously."

Home By Christmas

From now on, for many selectees and enlisted men of the National Guard, there will be a hitherto unsuspected lilt to the old slogan, "out of the trenches by Christmas." For by December 10, unless the international situation worsens, the War Department plans to release some 200,000 men from active service. Moreover, men 28 years of age and over, married men who have served 12 months, and others for whom continued service would be an obvious hardship because of personal obligations, may be released upon application. In fact, the War Department expresses the hope that "it will not be necessary to hold in service any individual now in training for the full term permissible under the law."

All releases will naturally be made at a uniform rate and with due regard for organization efficiency. Though the War Department must retain the right to keep the men under arms, should the national interest require their services, there is sound logic in the move to return as many as possible to civilian life. For this policy will permit the training of greater numbers of officers and men by replacing those on active duty. There should also be a decided improvement in morale on the part of those who had visions of serving for 30 months and now find cause for hope that their release will come much sooner.

Regardless of the financial inducement to reenlist, which is to be offered to selectees, members of the National Guard, and Regulars, it is perfectly clear that such an appeal will make little impression on many. The attractions of civilian life, particularly the higher pay, are too great. But the system of bonuses which the Army is about to inaugurate is at least a step toward equalizing the disparity between Army and civilian pay. Most important, perhaps, the Army will be able to weed out those who for psychological reasons have no business being in any armed force. It may be that, with their honorable discharge, there will be less reason for the current talk about "poor morale."

Changes In Britain

It is a significant paradox that two years of war, far from destroying British democracy, have actually broadened and deepened it. This fact, vouched for by practically every traveler who has returned from the beleaguered isles, is underlined in a careful survey of wartime Britain made by James Frederick Green for the Foreign Policy Association.

On the surface there is much in Great Britain that resembles the system operating in totalitarian countries. There is drastic rationing of food, clothing and almost everything else. There is regimentation on a large scale. Innumerable restrictions have been imposed on individual freedom. The Churchill government has been armed with practically dictatorial powers. Yet, in many particulars, it can be said with truth that there is actually more democracy in Great Britain today than there was before the war. In the first place, the British have imposed all these restrictions on themselves, through their own representatives. There is no dearth of criticism of the government and no attempt to suppress that criticism. The British people are not being driven to make their present war effort. They are driving themselves and driving the government.

It is because they prize the freedom they have enjoyed for centuries that they have shown such a readiness to accept restraints during the emergency. And, as Mr. Green reports, "the suffering and hardship resulting from air raids and evacuation have revived much of the community spirit that has been lacking in Britain." At a time when all one's earthly possessions can be destroyed by one bomb dropped from an enemy plane the importance of wealth has greatly declined. For the Luftwaffe is no respecter of persons. It has destroyed workingmen's dwellings and royal palaces with equal impartiality.

At the same time extremely heavy taxation has made it impossible for anyone to get rich out of the war. In these and other ways the war has had a leveling and democratizing effect on Britain which would have been deemed impossible not very long ago. The "old school tie" is getting frayed and is being discarded as a symbol of caste, a passport to preferment. Since Dunkerque the struggle has been for Britain a people's war in every sense of the term. And it is of more than passing interest that the least caste-ridden of the services—the R. A. F.—occupies in popular imagination, for good reason, the place of highest esteem. Britain is, indeed, undergoing a revolution. It is a silent revolution which advances by imperceptible steps, without drama, in the traditional British fashion. It is a revolution, nonetheless.

Too Rigid, Too Drastic

Before suspending its activities for a brief vacation Congress clearly demonstrated its eagerness to tighten up the loose ends of law enforcement in Washington. The House passed two bills aimed at vagrants and habitual criminals and a third strengthening the police force by the addition of 100 men. There are indications that the Senate is no less concerned than the House over the crime wave this city has recently experienced. Washingtonians would be shortsighted indeed if they did not show their appreciation of this interest in a local problem of great importance.

Unfortunately, however, one of these bills has passed the House and been reported out by the Senate District Committee without the careful examination that every bill dealing with crime should have. Its commendable purpose is to stiffen the sentences imposed upon second offenders. But its effect would be to rob the courts and the Parole Board of all discretion in dealing with men convicted of second, third or fourth "crimes of violence." It is difficult to believe that Congress would knowingly enact a statute for that purpose.

At present judges of the District Court have a wide margin of discretion in fixing penalties. For housebreaking, to choose a typical example, the punishment may run all the way from probation to 15 years in prison, depending upon the circumstances in each case. Sentences are imposed, moreover, in terms of a maximum and a minimum. When the minimum sentence has been served, the prisoner may apply for parole, which affords another opportunity to examine his case and study the possibility of his rehabilitation. Under the bill in question the indeterminate sentence would be abolished for all except first offenders. The court would be forced to impose the maximum sentence, regardless of extenuating circumstances, and at the end of a long period in prison the convict would be suddenly released without the benefit of the gradual adjustment which parole makes possible.

At present the law appears to leave the courts too much discretion in sentencing second offenders, and some judges have been altogether too lenient in meting out penalties. But that is no reason to go to the other extreme of imposing unusually harsh punishments for minor crimes. Under this bill a young man twice convicted of breaking into a store and stealing a carton of cigarettes would go to prison for 15 years without hope of parole. The power to apply the law intelligently would be swept away.

When rigid and drastic penalties are prescribed for relatively minor offenses juries often decline to convict persons who are obviously guilty. So extremely harsh punishments tend to bring about a breakdown in law enforcement as well as too much leniency. What is wanted is obviously a stiffening of penalties for second, third and fourth offenses without depriving the courts of the right to make the penalty fit the crime or the Parole Board of its function of rehabilitating prisoners who show promise of becoming law-abiding citizens. Unless the bill can be corrected by a committee amendment on the floor of the Senate, it should be recommitted for much more thorough study than it has received to date.

Air Ferry To Africa

The importance of both West Africa and the Middle East in the present and prospective strategy of the war is underlined anew by the establishment of an air ferry service between this country and the British forces in Egypt, and neighboring regions. Under this plan American-built planes will be flown to the Middle East via Brazil and West Africa by fliers in the employ of the Pan American Airways. The route of delivery, it is pointed out in the White House statement, "is so arranged that it will nowhere pass through the zone of actual warfare."

This development is of real importance for several reasons. First, it will ease the strain on British flying personnel and in so doing release British fliers for combat duty at a time when, because of the spread of the war, every man is needed. Secondly, the establishment of ground crews and supply depots at various points on the extended route from New York or Baltimore to, say, Cairo or Basra, will make it possible to hasten the dispatch of lend-lease supplies from "the arsenal of democracy" to the nations fighting Hitlerism. Thirdly, the air ferry will give American fliers invaluable training in flying over areas vital to our security. And, fourthly, since the route will also be available for general use, it will mean the extension of American commercial air routes to still another continent.

The decision of the Vichy government to join Hitler's "new order" has intensified the alarm felt in this country over the possibility of German occupation of Dakar, a jumping off place for an attack on Latin America. At the same time, the German penetration of the Ukraine and German activities in Iran have revived fears of a drive toward the Persian Gulf. So grave is this danger that Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell was recently removed from command of the Army of the Nile and sent to India to organize British forces in that region for eventual joint action with the Russians against the Nazis. The establishment of the air ferry to Africa and the Middle East is thus, aside from any other significance it may have, a wholly praiseworthy precautionary measure by the United States. The Atlantic conference of President Roosevelt and Premier Churchill is beginning to bear fruit.

Priority For Housing

It was inevitable, The Post recently pointed out, that soon or late shortages of building materials would hold up defense construction. Now it appears that contractors cannot get needed materials for defense housing and want priority ratings invoked. This surprises no one, least of all the OPM, which has warned of shortages. Though the time for action is long overdue, there is still a paralyzing division of opinion and of administrative authority. OPM Priorities Chief Stettinius, Defense Housing Coordinator Palmer and Federal Works Administrator Carmody all agree on the necessity for priorities. But are all strategic and critical materials to be rationed or only those for which there are no substitutes? Should each project be given a rating or should there be a blanket rating for all defense housing? And who is to administer the rationing? To these vital questions there seem to be several answers, depending on each agency's conception of its own authority.

The prime consideration is, of course, to get the houses built in a hurry so as to relieve overcrowding in areas where new defense plants are operating. This obviously involves, first of all, the settlement of questions such as were raised above. And intelligent settlement demands recognition that a defense housing program of 635 million dollars—indeed an overall defense construction program of $5,783,232,000—cannot be carried out unless private construction is stringently curtailed.

During the emergency, at least, it ought to be apparent that the admirable social definition of defense housing ("in the long run all housing is defense housing") cannot prevail. The pressure on building supplies is too great—so great, in fact, that sound policy calls for redefinition of defense housing and the postponement of all but the most immediately essential accommodations. Even for essential housing considerable ingenuity will be required to find suitable substitutes for materials, particularly metals, that are becoming more and more scarce. These are issues which Government agencies ought long since to have faced squarely. It is now fearfully late—but not too late.

Symbol Of Danger

The fire which wrecked the New York and Cuba Mail Line freighter Panuco with a disastrous loss of life on Monday may not have been caused by sabotage. Some officials believe that a careless smoker was responsible. But in any event it once more emphasizes the need for the greatest precautions against would-be wreckers working for a few foreign governments in this country. The United States is almost as much a target of enemy attack as nations admittedly at war. Any interference with the shipment of goods to or from our ports, whether for British use or for strengthening our own outlying naval defenses, is so much gain for the Axis powers. So it is not necessary to await the results of the inquiries already started by the FBI and the district attorney's office to sound the alarm. This latest and worst of a series of "mystery" fires along the New York waterfront emphasizes the need for constant and increased vigilance to prevent the recurrence of such disasters.

NO MORE PEACE

Now there is only confusion in every place:
The sound of wheels, the sound of time going by
With a roaring noise into the dome of space
Leaving the world behind, and the untenable sky.

Confusion is in the air, and in all men's minds,
Filling the hollows between our thoughts, following after Speech, after sleep, after quiet hours, till the tenant finds
It festooned like web from the shadowy mind's low rafter.

There is no place left to go, no silence anywhere
In the world we know, in this thunderous ground.
Leaving silence to a shape of a bird on the air
We must learn to love this fury we have found.

A Soldier's Place

The Gallup poll report saying that the majority of citizens think soldiers should not be sent outside the Western Hemisphere reminds me of something Lillian Mowrer, the wife of Edgar Ansel Mowrer, told a Madison audience early in 1940. She told us of a conversation she had had with a German aristocrat in the early '20s. He had told her there would be another great war, and in that war Hitler would conquer the West, and Japan would conquer the East, and then the two of them would go after the Western Hemisphere. "And then what wars there will be!" he had said, with profound relish!

The result of our staying entirely in the Western Hemisphere for our fighting may well be that Hitler and his allies do indeed get everything but ourselves! And then when these wars on the Western Hemisphere do begin, "what wars they will be!"

If we try to defend South America that means that our armies will have to be sent to the farthest reaches of South America to engage in what will be a score of duplicates of the Spanish civil war. There will be the well-armed, secretly and carefully trained pro-Franco, pro-Axis Fifth Columns, sometimes enormous ones, in every country; and the masses of other citizens who prefer democracy who will doubtless, like the Spanish loyalists, not be so well armed or so well trained. And the slogans will be "Down With Yankee Imperialists," "Down with Bolshevist Pluto-Democracies!" Our soldiers will be there to prove that we are "interfering with South America's private affairs!"

And along with all that, there is every reason to believe that civil war will have broken out here by that time. Hitler will have all the resources of the rest of the world at his command, as he now has the resources of most of our Allies in the last war, and all of the neutrals. He will be able to try to "protect" the "loyal Americans" (America First people) who want to drive out or imprison the "pro-British traitors." That pattern has worked everywhere else, and it will most certainly be tried here.

Pegler's Housecleaning

It is a great joy to me that Westbrook Pegler still contributes to your paper. His Sunday article is one of his outstanding efforts, and one of his most timely.

None of us must lose sight of many of the faults in our Government, and while most of the thinkers are in accord with the President's foreign policy, there is plenty of room for a little local housecleaning.

I have long felt that Martin Dies is one of the most abused men in the Nation today, and also that he is doing a great and necessary job, seemingly in opposition to the Administration.

In conclusion I ask what has happened to the pending legislation which would reduce the omnipotent power of labor? Is there any good reason why we should not recognize the faults in the Clayton Anti-Trust Act and remedy same?

Here's for more Pegler readers.

Why Daylight?

Why all the agitation for daylight saving? What good is it? Just something to annoy people, especially those with young children.

If, as you report, six out of seven favor it then Barnum was right. We must save gasoline, but provide more time to aimlessly ride around.

Kearney Strike

I have been disgusted by two editorials in The Post in which it is urged that the Government should take over the shipbuilding plant at Kearny, N. J., for the reason that the company refuses to agree to the modified closed shop, how called "maintenance of union membership," as recommended by the Labor Mediation Board. The shipbuilding industry on the Eastern seaboard has been traditionally open shop. Why should this be upset? For the company to agree to this recommendation of the Mediation Board would mean that all the employes who had previously joined the union or who might join in the future would have to continue to be members for life under penalty of losing their jobs. What business did the Labor Mediation Board have to make such a recommendation?

By repeatedly making such recommendations this board is inviting unions all over the country to strike for the closed shop. How does this aid the defense effort? I hope that The Post does not stand for a universal closed shop! There is enough economic slavery in Europe.

Why not criticize the President for appointing members on the Mediation Board who are so radical that the country is rapidly losing its faith in all Mediation Board recommendations? If the Navy should take over the Kearny plant, is the Navy willing to agree to discharge skilled workmen who once joined the union, but have later decided not to pay their union dues?

Draft Politics

Now that 18 months have been added to draftees' tenure, prominent magazines and some speakers are portraying morale of the draft Army as "pretty bad."

The other day Mr. McNutt drew attention to the fact that thousands of lads throughout the country are being exempted from draft duty because of alleged minor physical ailments.

Looking around the country there seems to be pretty good reason for believing that the draft and politics are not the strange bedfellows they ought to be, and which patriotism insists they should be. This kind of condition is probably what is disturbing the morale of our citizen Army more than anything else. If a few of our leading national newspapers got together and forced separation of politics from draft, things might be much better.

Breakdown Asked

Where a deal is put through in such a hurry as the Arlington cemetery grab was, it might be somebody's business to inquire how the 35 million dollars is to be divided. After all, it's public money and public land the Army is parceling out.

Viewpoints

After reading The Post's editorial on the Roosevelt-Churchill sea conference, in the issue of August 15, I read Dr. Walsh's analysis, tempered by Barnet Nover. Readers should remember that Dr. Walsh has consistently opposed our President's alliance with Britain in any way looking to our joining in war against the Axis. Our quasi-alliance with Russia in putting down Hitlerism was a bitter pill for Dr. Walsh, very naturally. Hence his so-called analysis of the epochal sea conference is necessarily colored. Dr. Walsh sees but one outstanding danger; the United States will go to war by the side of England against Hitler and Mussolini. If tyranny is to be destroyed on the earth by the two great English-speaking, liberty-loving, religious-freedom-teaching nations of earth going into war together, then the cost is too great for the end to be accomplished. This is the unmistakable implication of Dr. Walsh.

Barnet Nover, to my mind the most discerning of The Post's columnists on our international problems, says pertinently: "The bulk of the joint communique which the two statesmen issued had to do not with war, but with peace." He also adds: "Before Hitler had a chance to carry out his scheme (of world 'new order') the wind has been taken out of his sails by the statesmen of the English-speaking democracies. This time, at least, Hitler has really missed the boat." It is here that discrimination, apparently devoid of ecclesiastical or national influences, hits the bull's-eye, as to the significance of this Atlantic Ocean conference. From this time on the world must know that in the great divide, and even antagonism, of principles, America and Great Britain, and any who stand with them, have publicly and even proudly announced their aims and efforts in regard to an ideal world. Who can say that this pronouncement has in it an item of injustice or that anything savoring of vengeance is implied when victory comes? It is "Hitlerism" and not the German or the Italian people, wabbling Spain, Vichy-France or anti-British Southern Ireland, that is to be put down. If force must be used to destroy international banditry, we but do as a nation what we do locally in our own cities. Why all this cry and obstruction lest we go to war? We are already in it, and have been for months. And it is to our credit that we are.

Saving Gas

One of the most practical ideas which has been presented so far for furthering the "Save Gas" campaign is the one published in Thursday's Post under "The Federal Diary." The writer suggests that arrangements be made with the B. & O. Railroad for putting on local trains which would pick up passengers from such suburban areas as Bethesda, Kensington, Silver Spring, Takoma Park and some of the outlying sections of the District, and instead of dropping them off at Union Station, continue the run to Fourteenth and D Streets Southwest, after making one stop at Seventh Street Southwest.

I trust this idea may have the serious consideration of the Traffic Bureau and the B. & O. Railroad. I believe this plan would not only be a means of saving gas, but would help ease traffic congestion within the Federal Triangle by bringing a large number of employes within walking distance of most of the larger Government departments.

The Post Impressionist

Of Sweet Lagoons

The current year marks a Far Eastern anniversary on the English calendar—the centenary of Great Britain's rule in Hong Kong. Although this small colony, which was ceded to the British by the Chinese in 1841, has long played a definite part in the Asiatic annals of the British Empire, never has the role possessed the strategic importance that it does at the present moment, since Hong Kong not only lies athwart the Japanese navy's route to Indo-China but, presenting a threat on the right flank of Japan's southward advance, serves as a possible deterrent to a Nipponese attack on the Netherlands East Indies.

Before I had been there, I must confess, I thought of Hong Kong as a British-owned city in China. Actually, Hong Kong, the literal translation of which is "Place of Sweet Lagoons," is an island off the south Chinese coast, extremely irregular in outline, 10¼ miles in length and varying from 2 to 5 miles in breadth. Its principal city is Victoria, with which the name of the island itself is often confused. Our ship landed, on a spring morning, at Kowloon, a suburb of Victoria and separated from it by a lagoon. We were to set sail again at midnight. We had, therefore, a whole day and an evening to spend in or on Hong Kong. The prospect was an exciting one, for the harbor in Victoria Bay, being both beautiful and possessed of a peaceful vitality, seemed to augur well for the city itself to which we repaired by motor launch. The first thing that struck us about this island capital was the successful blending there—supposedly impossible—of Eastern and Western cultures. Unlike polyglot Shanghai, here was a small metropolis, unified and charming.

I stopped in at an English bank to cash a check and was courteously served by a young Chinese clerk who wished me "great delight while in Hong Kong." My companion and I wandered about the orderly streets of Victoria, enjoying the balmy air. We paused now and then, to make some purchases in the curio shops with their fascinating displays of Chinese handicrafts. Later in the morning we took the funicular tram to the top of Victoria Peak, so that we might obtain a panoramic view of the island and its harbor. The sight was one never to be forgotten, for, although Hong Kong is a mountainous island and lacking in vegetation, its general aspect, seen from the peak, as from the sea, is one of singular beauty. We stood, my companion reminded me, 1823 feet above sea level. Also enjoying the view, squatting on his haunches, to do so, was a solitary Chinese coolie clad in dull blue grass linen, a huge, flat, open-work straw hat reposing on his close-shaven head, his nut-brown face immobile, as his inscrutable eyes looked out across what was truly "the magnificent distance."

My companion nudged me. "There," he said in a whisper, "is a perfect example of 'watchful waiting.' There you have the Spirit of China."

In almost reverent silence, lest we disturb the lone watcher, we turned away and journeyed back to Victoria by the same funicular that had taken us to the top of the peak. We "took tiffin" at a British hotel in the city. The bill of fare again impressed us with the way East had met West and vice versa, on this far-off island. We were given our choice of British beef and boiled dumplings, chow mein and eggs fooyoung, not to mention Anglo-Indian curries.

After tiffin, we arranged to be taken by motor car to Repulse Bay, a picturesque inlet with a sloping, sandy beach, protected from the sea by two wooded headlands. The road by which we went wound a calm, colorful way along the hillsides. The journey took, in all, only about a half hour and we wished it might have been longer. We stopped to admire the golf course at Deepwater Bay and then went on foot to the Repulse Bay Hotel. There we swam in the warm, Chinese blue waters, afterwards sunning ourselves on the hotel's private beach. Later, we had "lemon squash"—lemonade to us—and rice cakes at a small table on the hotel terrace, lingering there until the sun began to set in brilliant mysteriousness as we had seen it rise, at sea, that morning. It was not until the lights came on, spangling island and bay, that we went inside and ordered dinner. Reluctantly, around nine o'clock, we started back to the ship.

We found, however, when the launch landed us at Kowloon, that we had two hours left before sailing time, so we started walking up the main street of this narrow strip of land along the lagoon. We looked in at the broad, open doorways of the dimly lighted shops where men and boys were carving the camphor chests for which Kowloon is famed. Our presence did not disconcert these clever artisans—nor did the increasing rainfall—or whatever, in secret, they may have known then of the threat of things to come. One idea was theirs—to create beauty from the material they had at hand.

It was literally "the end of a perfect day" for us, as we stood, just after midnight, at the ship's rail, looking out at the light-strung harbor, the equal of which, for sheer loveliness, I have not seen anywhere in the world. The voice of a man who stood near me suddenly shattered my reverie.

"The British aren't taking any chances with the future out here," he remarked to the woman at his left. "'Place of Sweet Lagoons,' the Chinese have named it. But the British are making it as good as a fortress. Why, the approaches to Hong Kong are the most strongly fortified there are around here. In just a year or two——"

"But—despite Hitler's statement to the contrary—there are islands!" I think when I remember Hong Kong, that little British-owned island off the Chinese mainland, standing ready, like some poet called to arms, to take up those arms "against a sea of troubles."

The Greatest Danger

By Associate Justice Frank Murphy

The U. S. And The Russo-German War

The following is an address delivered by Associate Justice Frank Murphy before the fifty-ninth international convention of the Knights of Columbus in Atlantic City, N. J., last night.

THE WORLD today is engaged in the most titanic conflict of all history. Two-thirds of mankind is in battle array and the other third is tremendously concerned with the outcome. This is a conflict which is straining not alone the spiritual and material resources, the man power and armament, of the nations involved; far more than that, it is straining the capacity of all peoples, including our own, for clear thinking and firm decision.

We, the United States, so recently arrived at our national adulthood, find ourselves in a position of leadership in the family of nations. Upon us the war has placed a heavy responsibility to all civilization. It is a responsibility which we can hope to fulfill only if we are sound and realistic in charting our course along the confusing paths of national interest and foreign policy.

Before the fall of France a year ago it was still possible to assume that what happened in Europe and Asia could not seriously affect or menace our national security. Our concern with the principles and practices of National Socialism was more academic than real. We might fulminate against them, but it was difficult to believe or imagine that we were face to face with a crisis in world history the outcome of which might profoundly affect and eventually determine our own future position in the world and safety of our institutions and way of life.

NOT UNTIL we became aware of the tremendous power of the German military machine and the worldwide reach of Nazi aims and political machinations did we find it necessary to think of this crisis in terms of similar crises in the past, as when the free nations of Europe were called upon to resist the onrushing power of the Ottoman Turks in the fifteenth century, or oppose the grandiose ambitions of Napoleon Bonaparte in the early nineteenth century.

In the face of this new challenge to world peace and a free international order, we have been obliged to reconsider the comfortable assumptions which have previously conditioned our thinking—assumptions of hemispheric detachment and security, of freedom from outside interference and safety from attack, even the basic assumption of an orderly world in which nations respect each other's integrity and conduct their national affairs according to law and morality and elementary decency.

For a nation whose thinking and foreign policy have long been conducted on the basis of such assumptions and an honest desire to live at peace with the world it has been difficult to become reoriented and think in terms of a different order of things requiring the use of economic and military sanctions for the protection of our interests. We are coming to see, nevertheless, that as things are, with powerful nations resorting to military action in support of a program which threatens to isolate us from the rest of the world and eventually challenge our position and freedom of action as a strong and independent state, we too must give practical consideration to military interests in the conduct of our foreign affairs and to the adoption of suitable tactics, both military and economic, to neutralize and offset the dangers that threaten us.

WE ARE AT ONE of the crossroads of history. In the light of what we have seen and the evidence already available, there can be little doubt that a complete German victory would mean a profound reshaping of the world. Not only Europe and Africa but South Africa as well would conceivably fall under the sway of the Nazi economic and political philosophy, directed and upheld from Berlin by a thoroughly ruthless government, supported by a military juggernaut of matchless power and skill, and dedicated to political doctrines which are the very antithesis of principles we hold sacred and fundamental to individual freedom and happiness. Large areas of the Asiatic continent with its teeming millions would be exposed to a similar fate.

Whatever you or I may think as individuals, as a nation we have in effect committed ourselves to the policy of aiding those countries which are offering resistance to the aggressions of Nazi Germany and her associates. As formally expressed in the terms of the Lend-Lease Act, these are countries whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States. If we like to think of ourselves as an arsenal of the democracies, the truth of the matter is that our Government and our people, the great majority of them, are convinced that our position in the world and our very safety as a strong and independent Nation, enjoying the freedom of intercourse with other peoples and an equal voice in world affairs, would be compromised and endangered by a complete Nazi victory. We of the present generation, as prudent and responsible men and women, having the welfare and the destiny of the Nation temporarily in our charge, cannot afford to let it happen.

At a time like the present it is of crucial importance that we keep our minds on the main issue, and not allow ourselves to be diverted or confused with respect to our real interests and the fundamentals of our policy. Knowing what we do, therefore, of the methods and aims of the Nazi government, its utter disregard for the rights and aspirations of other nations, and above all the vast striking power of its military organization, we must not allow ourselves to be confused and misled by its latest maneuver, the attack on Russia.

In ordinary circumstances we could afford to be indifferent to such a conflict. For men and women who cherish freedom of religion and the other fundamentals of democratic rule, there is little to choose from between the communism of Soviet Russia and the nazism of Germany. We want neither in this country. But we know that nazism, with its superior competence and perverted intelligence, its extraordinary energy and missionary zeal, its profound belief in racial superiority and destiny, its fanatical intolerance and above all its tremendous military power and skill, is by far the greater menace to free nations and free institutions. It is at present the real menace.

In thus defining our attitude toward war between communism and nazism, it is not a question of allying ourselves with the philosophy of communism. We know that with only negligible exceptions, the American people are unequivocally and unalterably opposed to communism. We reject it for its denial and contradiction of elemental human wants. We reject it for its desertion of religion and its suppression of religous bodies. We reject and oppose the communism of Soviet Russia for its opportunism in resorting to the aggression which in others it has so stringently condemned. We know from the records of our courts of law that its agents have sought with premeditation to undermine our democratic form of Government.

ON THIS POINT there can be no doubt. We stand against communism as a thing that is completely out of accord with our freely chosen way of life. But we should not permit this to blind us to our own interest and to the major fact that the great and immediate threat to our position and standing as a great Nation, commanding the respect of the world and dealing with other nations on terms of peace and equality, is Nazi Germany with its inordinate ambitions, its hated philosophy and its superb military organization.

With a fire raging in the neighborhood which threatens to take your house, or with a dangerous animal loose in the streets, you aren't too concerned about the religion or politics of those who join in the effort to put it down. In present circumstances, any nation resisting the might and aggression of Nazi Germany is, whether intentionally or not, advancing our interest as well as its own.

In launching the attack on Russia, the Nazi leaders piously proclaimed that they were fighting the battle of "Western Christian civilization against the Godlessness of Soviet Russia."

In doing this it was doubtless their hope to divide and confuse opinion in this country, especially among the people of the Catholic faith, who are notoriously abhorrent of the tenets and practices of communism. But a glance at the record will remove any doubt about the hypocrisy of this claim.

IN THAT singularly prophetic volume, "Mein Kampf," Adolf Hitler wrote as follows of the Christian faith: "The individual may realize with pain that with the appearance of Christianity there came into the much freer world of the ancients the first instance of spiritual terrorism. He cannot, however, dispute the fact that thenceforth the world was oppressed and dominated by this force; force can only be broken by force and terrorism by terrorism. Only by these methods can a new condition of affairs be brought about."

Very evidently, at the time of the writing of these observations, the Nazi leadership did not regard itself as a defender of "Western Christian civilization." On the contrary, the implication is clear that it considered itself obliged to bring about, by force and terrorism, a new condition of affairs. But this was in the early years.

What has been the Nazi Party's view in more recent times when it has wielded the power of government? One answer is provided by the words of Reich's Bishop Mueller, speaking with reference to a German Christian meeting in 1934. "The time will come," said Bishop Mueller, "when only Nazis will conduct services and when only Nazis will occupy the pews. We want one people, one state and one church."

Two years later, at a party congress in Nuremburg, the philosopher of the party, Dr. Alfred Rosenberg, reaffirmed this policy in more specific terms: "That the Catholic Church, and with it the Protestant Church in its present form, must disappear from the life of our people, is clearly evident to me, and, I believe I can assert, also to our Fuehrer."

IN 1938 the Voelkischer Beobachter, personal journalistic organ of Herr Hitler, served notice that "We are armed and prepared to continue the battle against Catholicism until the final frightful decision, until the point of total annihilation."

But let us not judge by words alone—however damning they may be. Let us consider deeds. On the eighth day of July, 1933, a concordat was solemnly entered into between the Vatican and the German Reich. It was signed for the Church by Cardinal Pacelli, now Pope Pius XII, and for Germany by Ambassador Franz von Papen. In this treaty Chancellor Hitler pledged freedom of worship for the Catholics of Germany, and the respective function of the church and state were carefully described. As to the manner in which the agreement was carried out I shall quote from the encyclical letter issued by Pope Pius XI on March 14, 1939:

"In the difficult and eventful years which followed the Concordat, every word and every action of ours was ruled by loyalty to the terms of the agreement; the unwritten law of the other party has been arbitrary misinterpretation of agreements, evasion of agreements, evacuation of the meaning of agreements and finally more or less open violation of agreements. In the furrows in which we labored to sow the seeds of true peace, others . . . sowed the tares of suspicion, discord, hatred, calumny, of secret and open fundamental hostility to Christ and His church, fed from a thousand different sources and making use of every available means.

"On them, and on them alone, and on their silent and vocal protectors, rests the responsibility that now on the horizon of Germany there is to be seen not the rainbow of peace but the threatening storm clouds of destructive religious wars."

ENOUGH of the facts have emerged to provide a cleancut picture of the conditions referred to in the Pope's late encyclical. It is a picture of a systematic and sustained endeavor to drive a wedge between the Catholics of Germany and their traditional faith. It is a picture of the closing of churches, monasteries, convents and schools on invented accusations and flimsy pretexts; of the regimentation of Catholic youth and the abolition of their youth organizations; of the elimination of Catholic Action societies and publishing houses, the surveillance and supervision of priests, and the destruction of business establishments through boycotts and blacklists. It is a picture of stealthy and demoralizing persecution.

That this program of suppression has continued to this day there seems little doubt. On July 6, 1941—two weeks after the start of the alleged German "holy war" against communism—the archbishops and bishops of greater Germany protested bitterly against the actions of the government in a joint pastoral letter. Specifically, they charged that all diocesan publications have been completely suppressed; that numerous convents had been closed without reason; that all Catholic schools have been suppressed, and that all religious instruction has been stopped in other schools.

From Poland, the news has been vastly more shocking. In a report published under the authorization of the Vatican, Cardinal Hlond last year told of the murder of hundreds of priests, the imprisonment and brutal persecution of thousands of others—clergy and laymen alike—and the defilement and destruction of hundreds of churches and other homes of religion.

The people of Poland are tragically aware that it is no champion of the Cross who occupies their land. That knowledge is shared by the people of Norway, of Holland, of Austria, and, above all, by the Christian people of Germany itself. They know that the Nazi regime is a Christian regime only when it is good military strategy.

IN CITING evidences of Nazi opposition to the Catholic Church and its communicants, I do not wish to imply that people of other faiths have not also suffered persecution. The sad plight of the unfortunate members of the Jewish faith under Nazi rule is only too well known. Fresh in our minds also is the recent declaration of the Lutheran Bishops of Norway crying out against the "systematic rule of terror by the Nazi Storm Troopers" and continued interference in the affairs of the church. And the prayers of the whole Christian world go out to that brave and gallant figure of German Protestantism, Pastor Niemoeller, who has been subjected to the privation and terrors of the concentration camp for opposing publicly the politics of the Nazi government. I am addressing this appeal to members of every religious faith, not to be confused or deceived by the recent turn of events in Europe.

Such, in part, is the record of those who now ask us to accept them as crusaders for Christianity against the Godlessness of communism. It is a record which shows beyond doubt the futility of looking to the Nazi leaders of Germany as allies in the defense of the Christian faith. Not only have they proved by word and deed their hatred of Christianity but they have shown the folly of placing trust in their pledged word.

From this record and from other evidence it should be abundantly clear to anyone that under Nazi rule no religion would remain free. Any concessions thus far made to religious bodies have been made solely for reasons of convenience and opportunism. The only religion acceptable to the Nazi party would be under the direction and control of the Nazi state.

While the Communist philosophy remains a danger to the Christian religion, it is not today the greatest danger. The overshadowing menace—and the one from which we must not let ourselves be distracted — is the philosophy of nazism embodied in the present German military regime. In that philosophy and that regime we face not merely Godlessness, but Godlessness which even now is in grave danger of carrying out its ruthless program—a program for which history may have no adequate parallel since the days of Nero and his successor tyrants on the throne of ancient Rome.

WE SHALL NOT, therefore, be deceived by this sham crusade in behalf of Christianity and Western civilization. Our hope and our safety lie not in a triumph of Nazi arms and the Nazi creed. We want no part of this or any other form of totalitarian doctrine. Our hope lies in the triumph of democracy. Our democracy will not fail us if we are willing to act together as one nation with a single policy, determined to preserve and safeguard the heritage that has been bequeathed to us by our fathers.

Today, no less than in the beginning of our national life, the religious faith of our people is the chief source and pattern of our morality. Wisely did the framers of our fundamental laws provide against any interference with the free exercise of religion. This is a right which has been jealously safeguarded by the courts but in the exercise too much neglected, I fear, by many of our citizens. Let us hope that in the stress and strain of the unhappy period through which the world is now passing the people of this Nation will remember what they owe to their religious inheritance and be willing to make whatever sacrifice may be needed for is preservation.

It is from the simple precepts imparted to us by Holy Writ, impressed upon us from day to day and week to week by our religious exercises, that we as a people have derived the qualities of sobriety and honest and moral integrity that make democracy possible. Under the benign protection of the great document of government which defines and safeguards our basic liberties, religion has been free to grow and flourish throughout the land. It ministers to our needs in many forms, whether in the sacrifice of the mass or the sacred books of Jew and Mormon. It finds noble expression in the hymns and prayers of the great Protestant communions and provides spiritual manna in the simple devotions of the Quaker.

In that historic meeting at Philadelphia which produced our Charter of Government, no statesman or delegate of that day thought it necessary or meet to propose the adoption of an ersatz religion under the control of the state as a means of insuring national unity among the several elements of the new Republic. Their concern was that religion should be free and untrammeled. For whether we hearken to the great prophets of Israel or follow the Star of Bethlehem, whether we turn for spiritual guidance to other creeds and symbols, let us never forget that we are members of a common brotherhood searching and striving for the ideal of peace on earth, with charity and justice for all men. God speed the day!

War Prophecies

By Ernest Lindley

British Land Offensive Unlikely

LORD BEAVERBROOK'S mission to this country has revived reports that the British are planning to take the offensive in 1942, with or without American aid. Informed officials severely quality these reports.

LINDLEY

An offensive action on land capable of coping with the main German armies is out of the question in the calculable future, in their opinion. The British do not have enough men. We are not even planning an army of such dimensions. And if we had it, we would lack, for several years, enough ships to transport and supply it across the oceans.

In World War I more than two million American troops were landed in France. But they got most of their arms and much of their ammunition from the British and French. And the quantities needed were much smaller than for warfare today. The entire American Navy and most of the British and French navies were available to protect the supply route. The Mediterranean was safe. There was no Far Eastern threat, as Japan was a British ally. Merchant ships did not have to be diverted to long hauls around the Cape of Good Hope to Egypt and to supply British and American bases in the Pacific.

A MAJOR LAND invasion by the British, with or without the aid of American troops, is considered too remote to be planned seriously at the present. Smaller expeditionary forces which can gnaw at the periphery of the Nazi domain are a practical possibility. The British have partly trained troops in excess of their needs for an impregnable defense of the British Isles.

A primary concern of the British is to strengthen their forces in the Middle East. The victories over the Italians in Libya and Ethiopia were won by astonishingly few men. At best, the first-class fighting equipment of the army of the Nile was meager, and much of what it had was lost in the debacle of Greece.

Prior to the German attack on Russia the British position in the Middle East was so precarious that British strategists seriously doubted their ability to keep a foothold on the shores of the Mediterranean.

DURING the last six weeks, however, considerable numbers of trucks, tanks, and other equipment have arrived in Egypt—some from this country. But the six or seven thousand mile haul around the Cape of Good Hope is a heavy drain on shipping, while the east-west transit of the Mediterranean remains too dangerous and costly to be attempted except for an extreme emergency. Thanks to German preoccupation with Russia, however, the British have a chance of building up an army in the Middle East capable of stopping a German drive. If the Russians hold, it might become a force strong enough to take the offensive: to clear Libya and eventually, perhaps, to thrust into the Balkans against the southern flank of the German armies facing the Russians.

The British also may be able to find enough men for small expeditionary forces to worry the Nazis at other points: in Norway, perhaps, or Spain. At present they lack the equipment.

THE BRITISH have in India, of course, an immense theoretical reserve of man power. Indian troops have fought magnificently in the Middle East. But Indian fighting men of their quality are limited in number. Although India is making a large and increasing contribution to the war effort, the mustering of a huge Indian army is beset with political and other difficulties.

Except as young men reach military age, the British have called up almost all their front-line fighting material. There are no large reserves in the dominions. The British are also short of army mechanics and technicians. Although they may have the pilots, well informed observers doubt that they can find the ground crews for an immensely larger air fleet, or the maintenance men for a large number of mechanized divisions.

With these facts in mind, it is easily understood why well informed observers think the most the British can hope to do on land is to secure the Middle East, harass the Nazis on the fringes, and, perhaps, if the Russians hold into next year, organize a flanking attack.

Commissioners Invite Move For Hearing on Daylight Time

The District Commissioners would "welcome" a public hearing on the daylight saving time issue if such a move were demanded, it was reported at the District Building yesterday.

Commissioner Guy Mason said he would have "no objection whatever" to holding a public hearing on the question and further suggested that a poll similar to the Gallup Poll be conducted in the metropolitan area.

Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz said he had never been opposed to the principle of daylight time, but thought it would be "foolish" for Washington to adopt the policy if neighboring communities remain on standard time.

Counties across the Potomac—Arlington, Fairfax and the City of Alexandria—are waiting for the District to take the lead. Parts of Virginia already are using fast time at the request of Gov. Price.

Focal Points Of Danger

By Barnet Nover

Iran, Thailand, Siberia, Dakar

VLADIVOSTOK is a long way from Bangkok, Dakar is separated from Teheran by more than the width of a continent. None of these far-flung places is as yet directly involved in a war which has already engulfed three continents and has spilled over into the encircling oceans. But their period of immunity is rapidly drawing to a close. Siberia and Thailand, Iran and West Africa—each of these once remote regions has become a focal point of danger. For the present conflict is one which cannot be confined within geographic limits.

NOVER

IT WAS NOT so long ago that some of our isolationists used to talk of the war as a "European war," the point being that the war was of European origin and did not concern nations fortunate enough to be separated from that unhappy continent by the width of an ocean. They were conveniently closing their eyes to the fact that the war was the result of the breakdown of the international order that had come into being in 1919, that the first blows struck at that order had occurred in the Far East, the next in Africa and it was not until 1936, with the Spanish civil war as the occasion, that Europe itself became engulfed in the tide of aggression that was ultimately to overwhelm almost all the free nations of the continent.

The latest victim of aggression is Russia. If Hitler has his way that country will not be the last. He did not stop with the annexation of Austria and the partition and ultimately the annexation of Czecho-Slovakia. He could not stop, even if his armies should overrun all of Russia. For even if that happened he would still have to reckon with Great Britain and the United States.

Nor can Japan stop with the occupation of Indo-China which has added one of the world's richest colonial areas to the imperial domain of the Mikado. For what England and England's resistance are to Hitler, China and China's resistance are to Japan.

THE GERMAN ARMIES have driven deep into the Ukraine during recent weeks. They claim to have made themselves masters of the entire region east of the Dnieper. Even if that claim happened to be true the Nazis are still a long way from the rich oil deposits of Baku and Batum and even farther away from the Persian Gulf and the oil wealth of Iran. That fact has not deterred them from thinking and planning ahead. For months Iran has been overrun by German "tourists." A pro-Nazi putsch in Teheran, along the lines of that carried out in Iraq by Rashid Ali el-Gailani in Bagdad some months ago, is a possibility.

That is why Great Britain and Russia have jointly begun to put pressure on Iran to expel the German "tourists" and keep herself out of Hitler's clutches. The German armies may never get to the Caucasus. But if they do, Moscow and London are determined that the Russian forces defending that region will not, through German intrigue in Iran and the weakness or complacence of the Teheran government, be placed in a vise.

HITLER'S attack on Russia has not ended the interest of the Nazis in including Dakar. They hope ultimately to use Dakar as a base of operations against British routes in the Persian Gulf. They do not underestimate the importance of sea power. They believe, with Haushofer that given sufficient air power the control of the oceans belongs to those who control the land. And certainly the establishment of Nazi footholds in Iran and West Africa would add considerably to the already backbreaking task imposed on British sea power and further complicate Britain's difficult supply problem.

The danger to Britain and to us as well would be further increased should Germany and Japan establish direct contact with each other. That could happen if the Japanese overran Siberia while Germany overran European Russia or if, through the conquest of Thailand and Burma, the Japanese were able to short-circuit Singapore while the Germans drove on to the Persian Gulf.

The struggle is entering a crucial stage. A good deal depends on whether and for how long Russia remains capable of fighting on. The longer she resists the more time Great Britain will have to strengthen her defenses in the Middle and Far East, the greater the aid she will receive from the United States. As long as Russia resists, Japan will remain separated from her European partners and forced to act in isolation.

Russia is the keystone of a strategic arch which extends from the South Atlantic to the Western Pacific. To keep that keystone in place is an obvious tactical necessity whether we think in terms of defense of Britain, the status quo in the Far East or the security of the Americas.

Home Nursing Courses Sped for Clubwomen

Caroline E. Thompson Preparing To Launch Federation's Project Immediately After Labor Day

Plans to strengthen home defense by offering home nursing courses to all members of organizations in the District Federation of Women's Clubs were being made yesterday by the recently created nursing committee, headed by Mrs. R. C. Hibben.

Miss Caroline E. Thomson, director of home nursing service for the District Chapter of the Red Cross, as vice chairman of the federation committee, yesterday was busily preparing for the launching of this clubwomen's movement after Labor Day.

The Red Cross will furnish instructors for as many classes as are necessary to absorb the clubwomen's enrollment for the six weeks' intensive courses, Miss Thomson said. In addition to the 14 instructors at present, 22 nurses are on the reserve list.

"A number of nurses who are married and not now actively engaged in a career in this field will teach on a volunteer basis as a contribution to national defense," Miss Thomson said.

The course, she pointed out, will equip women to safeguard the health of their own families and to take part more efficiently in community measures in emergencies.

The course will deal with personal and community hygiene, management of a healthful home, care of infants and children, how to observe symptoms of illness, care of communicable diseases, management of the sick room and other related subjects.

The course is taught by registered nurses who are enrolled with the Red Cross nursing service. The classes will be held at locations arranged by the various clubs—in the clubhouses or in members' homes or at the District Chapter House.

"Prevention of illness" is the keynote of the course, Miss Thomson stressed.

Miss Thomson, a small, alert, blue-eyed native of Scotland, who says she "was imported" to this country at the age of 18 months, has been with the Red Cross here for nearly seven years. From one home nursing class in November, 1934, the District Chapter's program has grown to 42 classes last year.

Already since the first of this year, 35 classes have been completed, with more than 600 students receiving certificates.

Miss Thomson, who grew up in Pennsylvania and received her professional training in that State, has served with the Philadelphia Chapter of the Red Cross and with the State department of health in Delaware. In the former position, she organized one rural nursing service and reorganized another.

The home nursing committee and also a nutrition committee have been organized under the federation's division of mothercraft, which is headed by Mrs. G. G. Sward. The committees are in line with the federation's emphasis on national defense in its coming season's work.

Mrs. Amy C. Ransome, of Pasadena, Calif., second vice chairman of the National Woman's Party, who is in Washington this week, has been named cochairman for organizing work of the party, it was announced yesterday.

Serving with Mrs. Clara Snell Wolfe, of Columbus, Ohio, organization chairman, Mrs. Ransome will have charge of promoting expansion of the party west of the Mississippi River.

Mrs. Ransome's appointment followed her report of work in California and other Western States, at the meeting of the party's executive council several days ago at headquarters, 144 B Street Northeast. The council mapped plans for spreading sentiment for the Equal Rights amendment.

Within a few days Mrs. Ransome will leave for Vermont to confer with Miss Alice Paul, leader of the Woman's Party. She will head back toward California on August 31, taking with her Margery Ogle Fry, her 9-year-old granddaughter, of Fair Hill Farm, near Laytonsville, Md. Margery will spend the winter with her. Madame Chairman

By Suzanne

Letters from England, bringing newspaper pictures of "White House" Tommy, the little evacuee "adopted" by Mrs. Roosevelt, have been received by Mrs. Leo Kasehagen, chairman of the press and publicity department of the District Federation of Women's Clubs.

The letters came from her sister, the widow of the Hon. Maj. Frederick Carpenter-Holland-Griffith, of Biddenham Close, Bedford, England. The article about Tommy Maloney showed a winsome little boy, 3½ years old, in whom Mrs. Roosevelt became interested through the American Foster Parents Plan for War Children. He and his twin sister, Mary, came from a severely bombed London district to stay at the Titley Nursery in Herefordshire, supervised by Mrs. J. B. Priestley, wife of the novelist.

Mrs. Kasehagen's sister is growing vegetables and fruits which she shares with hospitals and with persons who have no gardens. Her gooseberries, currants, strawberries and raspberries were plentiful, she wrote, but fruits that have to be bought are such rarities that she said: "Today I received the box of lemons—the first I've had since my nephew brought me one lemon from Canada in the spring when he flew over with a bomber."

She told of attending the Independence Luncheon given in London on the Fourth of July by the American Society. One of the speakers said there were two kinds of Americans in England, the "Stickers," the ones who wish to stay, and the "Lost Colony," those who wished to go too late and had to stay.

TRIP TO WEST—Mrs. Gertrude Bowman, who has charge of the Girl Scout Little House on New York Avenue, will return September 1 from her vacation, which has taken her from Washington, Iowa, to Feather Falls, Calif.

She stopped in Iowa to visit relatives, then went on to the Grand Canyon and down into Arizona to visit more relatives. She is spending the latter part of her vacation in California with her brother, A. T. Stewart.

The C. A. Watkins Mark 435th Year Wed by Dinner

Mrs. Arthur Charles Watkins, president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, and her husband celebrated their forty-fifth wedding anniversary last night with a small dinner at their home, 3365 Rittenhouse Street Northwest.

The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Albertson and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Newell, of Alexandria.

Mrs. Watkins, who was Miss Florence Elizabeth Van Auken, was married to Mr. Watkins 45 years ago yesterday in Hannibal, N. Y. They have made their home in Washington since 1919.

Southeastern U. Sorority Plans Picnic Tomorrow

A picnic for members of Kappa Phi Epsilon Law Sorority of Southeastern University will be held tomorrow afternoon and evening in Rock Creek Park.

The ways and means committee under the chairmanship of Miss Mary E. Emery arranged the event for discussion of fall plans, prior to the opening of the season next month with a "rush" tea.

Other members of the committee in charge include Mrs. Lillian B. Harmon, Mrs. Alice Reichert Affronti, Miss Anne Callahan, Miss Viola Ann Bartz, Mrs. Prebble I. Choate, Miss Vivian Dillon, Miss Ruth L. Hall, Miss Gertrude Kinsley and Mrs. Dorothy Weimelt Mason.

Mrs. Estelle Baldwin, past dean of the sorority, will entertain the members at her home, 2329 Huidekoper Place Northwest, in case of rain tomorrow.

City Club to See Slides On 4-H Activities

George W. Ackerman, photographer with the Department of Agriculture, will show slides dealing with national parks and 4-H Club activities, at a program at the Women's City Club at 8 p. m. tomorrow. Pictures of the annual 4-H encampment in Washington and a series on the Maryland branch of the organization will be included in the program.

Miss Mary Isabel Allen and Miss Nell Price will be hostesses for the evening.

Roosevelt Put U. S. in Alliance With Britain, Sen. Johnson Says

Senator Hiram Johnson (Republican), of California, yesterday charged that President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill formed an Anglo-American "offensive and defensive alliance" in their conference at sea.

The veteran isolationist asserted that Mr. Roosevelt "has made commitments in violation of the Constitution," and invited Senators "who think you are the ones who represent the American people to go have another think."

Johnson took the floor to question assurances given the Senate by Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, that the Roosevelt-Churchill conference produced no commitments "beyond those we have already made in the Lend-Lease Act."

Invasion Story Denied

Yesterday's sharp debate began when Barkley denounced as "a deliberate and malicious falsehood" a report carried by a Washington and a Chicago newspaper that the President and Churchill agreed that military invasion of the European continent was essential for defeat of Germany and that such an invasion was contingent upon "assistance of a vast American expeditionary force."

The article purported to be based on statements by Congressional leaders who conferred with Mr. Roosevelt Monday, Barkley said, charging that it was written "to deceive and frighten the American people" and "break down confidence in their Government."

President Roosevelt, reviewing newspaper coverage of his meeting with Churchill, said at his press conference yesterday that he understood Barkley had already discussed a certain article and that he would not add any comment.

Barkley, one of the leaders who attended Monday's White House conference, said he could assure the Senate that "no additional commitments have been made by our country to Great Britain or any other country."

"Doesn't Say Who"

Johnson insisted it was "as plain as the nose on a man's face" that the eight-point declartion, with its blueprint for a new world order "after the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny," had created "an offensive and defensive alliance between the two governments."

"The declaration doesn't say who is to destroy the Nazi tyranny," Barkley snapped. "I don't think the Senator from California would disagree with the expression of the hope that it should be destroyed and these other principles established."

"If you express hope in an instrument of this kind," Johnson replied, "you've got to do what you can to bring about the accomplishment of that hope.

"You can do it in one and one way only, and that is by war," he cried.

Johnson, who has frequently expressed bitter criticism of the Administration's pledges of assistance to Russia, said that with publication of the 8-point declaration he presumed Josef Stalin has now become "the champion of these litanies, these idealistic mouthings."

Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, another leader of the isolationist bloc, joined the debate with an assertion that Congress "should make it known to the whole world that the President, under the Constitution, has no right to commit the United States to war."

Visit to Battleship

Clark condemned Mr. Roosevelt for going aboard the British battleship Prince of Wales, which, he said, was a legitimate target of Nazi attack.

"If that ship had been bombed, which thank God it was not," he declared, "that would have been an act of war against the United States. Does the Senator (Barkley) think the President was deliberately putting himself in a position where an act of war might have been committed?"

Barkley said an attack on the Prince of Wales, at the time the President was aboard and an American warship lashed alongside, "might have excited American public opinion against a foreign government." He added that he admired the President for "his courage."

Styles in Architecture
DUTCH TOWN
This is an American adaptation of the Dutch urban style. It represents an intimate and "human" architecture—supremely utilitarian and picturesque. Actually the style dates back to the halcyon days of the Dutch Empire in the 17th and 18th Centuries. The decorative motif is a conglomorate of medieval, classic, Venetian and Portuguese architectures. Today, many houses in Washington have features derived from this beautiful style.
A PICTURESQUE contribution to better living, the Dutch Town House is a favorite all over America. Yet, it is just one of many popular models available in and around Washington. No matter what the style you have in mind, consult the houses for sale every day in the Post's classified section. There you're almost sure to find exactly what you want—in a desirable locality and at an ideal price. Some of these homes are offered below market value for a quick sale. Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Braves Economic Insecurity to Wed Seagoing Sweetheart, and Both Report Lessening of Anxiety At Being Apart, and Increased Incentive to Save

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I regret to say that I do not read your valuable column every day, as time does not permit. But always when I do read it, I find it most interesting, and it gives me a broader outlook on others' problems, as well as a better understanding of my own. However, my purpose in writing is not to praise your work in general, but to endorse your comment of August 15, in particular—when you recommended immediate marriage to a young man, 21, now serving in the Navy, who "finds that separation from his sweetheart is clouding his essentially pure love of her with evil thoughts."

I have been married for just one month; and it so happens that my husband and I were in pretty much the same dilemma, until we solved our problem in the manner you suggest. My husband is serving in the Navy, too. We, too, had wanted money in the bank before we undertook marriage. We wanted to be sure of making a "right start.' Our love for each other was always deep and strong; but after intervals of enforced separation, when he had been at sea, we seemed to mean even more to each other.

The world situation, as well as our own, was disturbing. We realized that the circumstances playing havoc with our hopes of "sensible" marriage probably would become more serious, rather than less so. So we decided to move with the times, rather than wait desperately for a return of normal conditions. In brief, we decided to get married. We had two happy weeks togetner before my husband returned to sea, but when we parted, our minds were more at peace than they had been for months, and we could honestly say we were glad we had married, come what may.

Some elements of anxiety had gone out of our concern for the future. We had a feeling of standing together to face the worst; and we could now pool our resources in tackling the problems of saving money for a better day. My husband's pay is fair, and all of it except monthly "pocket money" will go into the bank. I am employed and by staying on where I lived as a single girl, my maintenance expense will be small, and I can save a bit each pay day, too. All things considered, it looks as though our marriage at this time may prove to be a good financial investment; because if we hadn't got married each of us would have been more spendthrift when away from each other, on account of having no immediate incentive to save. As a matter of fact, both of us say now that we are sorry we didn't get married sooner.

So I wish to say to that young man and his sweetheart that I hope they follow your advice. I wish them all the luck in the world. (And the same to you, Miss Haworth!) If their love of each other is fine and strong, the fact of being married will lessen their anxiety at being apart, and strengthen the bonds of companionship when they are together. Because of my certainty on this point, and because there must be many other young persons anxiously debating a similar question today, I would much appreciate the publication of my views. Sincerely, O. P. D.

Convalescent Youth Needs Job Out of Doors

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a young man, 26 years of age. I am suffering at present from a nervous breakdown, brought on by a recent illness, which makes it impossible to perform my duties in a Government department. I am forced to depend for support upon my parents, who are not in a financial sense able to assume this added burden. This feeling of being a burden retards my recovery.

Miss Haworth, please print this for me. There may be someone among your readers who, in return for favors granted him in time of trial, will offer me some light employment—peferably out-of-doors or in the country; or as a personal companion. I am clean, neat, well-read, of Anglo-Saxon background, and can furnish excellent references. A month or two is all that would be needed to effect recovery.

Anyone kind enough to give me a helping hand surely will secure a blessing from a just Providence in their time of need. Yours sincerely, J. P.

Diffident Supplicant Makes Good Impression

NOTE TO READERS: The author of the foregoing letter submitted the document in person, to appeal more urgently for its publication. Considering his handicap of neurotic illness (which the occupation he seeks might aid in curing) he made a favorable impression, being (as he says) neat and clean in appearance, well mannered (on the somewhat diffident side) and immediately recognizable as belonging to the "white collar" classification of worker. New Cosmetics Give a Clean-Faced Look

BECAUSE OF HER IVORY-TONED coloring and pale yellow hair, Ann Swanson, Chevy Chase Junior College student (pictured at right) must use pastel make-up and rosy lipstick to get that clean-faced look the younger set currently favors. But Temple Business School Student Mary Jane Moran (below), being a brownette, gets the same effect with a bright red lipstick and powder of a warm pink shade. Other types are discussed in the accompanying story

Meaning of Labels

WHAT IS THE MEANING of the little white tags seen on wool outfits in stores the past month? Do the percentages of wool and other fibers mentioned on the labels have serious "consumer" significance? Queries have come to The Post Fashion Editor recently from women who are puzzled as to what these "tags" intend to convey.

The "tags" are information labels, appearing as a result of the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939, which became effective last July 14.

The purpose of the act, as defined in part, is "To protect producers, manufacturers, distributors and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes."

The act places no restrictions on the kind of material that goes into a garment, provided it is correctly labeled. Any amount of information may be included on the label. The law does require, however, that the label show the percentage of wool, reprocessed wool, or reused wool contained in all wool products.

To distinguish between the different woolen fabrics, wool is the fiber as it comes from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or rabbit pelt before it has been made into a product. Reprocessed wool is the fiber resulting from a wool fabric which has not been used or worn, and converted back into a fibrous state. Reused wood is the fiber produced after wool or reprocessed wool has been used or worn and then converted into a fibrous state for further weaving.

Because a label may say 50 per cent wool, 30 per cent reprocessed wool and 10 per cent reused wool, a fabric need not be judged as inferior. As a matter of fact, women have been buying garments made of mixtures of wools, or rayon and wool, for several years. A mixture of fibers does not mean the fabric will not wear well. In some cases it may even wear better than one labeled 100 per cent virgin wool. Indeed, some of the overcoats made for the Army are being ordered in wool and reprocessed wool.

What the label really means to a woman shopper is guarantee that she knows what she is getting. She will be informed on the amount of wool and other fibers incorporated in the material of the garment she is viewing. So when a label says 85 per cent wool and 15 per cent rabbit hair, don't think the manufacturers ran out of wool!

Colors Vie With Black

EACH FALL, when black takes the spotlight, women who feel they do not wear it well seek a color substitute. And women who do not wear brown becomingly ask what other colors will be smart for autumn.

In solving this color problem designers give one solution with their creation of midnight blue—a color originating in men's dinner clothes. Next in preference is one of the season's best colors, namely, green. There are greens of every description: bottle green, emerald, cacti and drab. Purple, too, is a runner-up in the color picture.

But before you give up black entirely, try it in a dress with a deep V-neck and colored accessories. Black with red or black with turquoise is a team difficult to equal. Or, brown with aqua and blue with wine make excellent alternate color combinations.

Smart 'Two-Tones'

ONE WOMAN who reveled in wearing black with brown last year and felt right in style, asks if the combination will still be high fashion this fall.

The answer to this query comes from the buyer of an exclusive woman's store. She says that black with brown has been tried and accepted. This year it is a greater fashion favorite than last year, when it was just being developed. Designers have gone so far as to extend this combination into furs. Alaska seal is being shown with black outfits and black Persian lamb with brown.

Cinnamon brown with black, so successful last year, is reincarnated this year in a new shade called "snuff." It appears not only in dresses, but also in hats, bags, shoes and gloves. The best rule to follow in combining colors, however, is to not have too much secondary contrast. One color should predominate the scene.

'Glamour Girl' Make-up Loses Favor With Smart Collegians

By Carolyn Abbott.

THIS YEAR'S crop of beauty conscious college girls won't be copyists of movie sirens. The bold smears of blackish red lipstick that meant glamour to them in past seasons is in the discard. A rosier, lighter lipstick that enhances their natural beauty takes its place.

"Instead of striving for so-called adult glamour," says Miss Ivy Mason, beauty consultant of a local department store, "the 1942 college girl is asking 'what can I do to be more beautiful in my own right?'"

"With this attitude toward beauty," Miss Mason remarks, "the college girl is getting down to fundamentals instead of leaning on artifice. She is stressing her natural beauty instead of badly imitating the worldly older woman."

Yesterday this representative of a well known beauty firm presented, in conjunction with a department store here, a cosmetic-fashion show, reporting latest fashions in make-up and clothes to be worn from dawn till dusk by college girls.

Six girls from Washington's colleges and universities modeled the new make-up shades and school togs. They were chosen according to type to illustrate the correct shades of cosmetics for the college-age crowd. The models included: Miss Roberta Rule, American University; Miss Patsy Kelsey, Gunston Hall; Miss Marianne Hunter, Maryland University; Miss Mary Jane Moran, Temple; Miss Ann Lawson, Chevy Chase, Jr. College; Miss Peggy Kinsman, George Washington University.

Five Types of Make-Up

An expert in diagnosing skin and make-up problems of the college-agers, Miss Mason gives the following guide for correctly choosing cosmetics:

VERY DEFINITE BLONDE: The Nordic type with light hair, china blue eyes and pastel coloring should use pastel rouge and lipsticks. Very light blue eye-make-up for evening and none for classroom.

GOLDEN BLONDE: Rouge and lipstick with a touch of orange, and peach powder. Dawn, a new lipstick, is predominantly red with yellowish undertones.

BROWNETTES: Clear true red lipstick and rouge, pastel powder with a warm pinkish tinge.

RED HEADS: Rouge and lipstick with a brownish-orange cast. A beige blend of powder that neutralizes freckles.

VIVACIOUS BRUNETTE: A deep, clear red such as the new Navajo brings out the loveliest skin tones. A dark warm shade of powder modifies sallow skin, giving it the appearance of a magnolia.

Artistry in Rouging

Smile when applying rouge, regardless of shape of face. The fatty hill of the cheek is the natural blush line and should be accentuated, according to Miss Mason. Blend the rouge back to hair line. Don't leave any white showing around outer corner of the eye as this gives a hardening effect. With a facial tissue, carefully blend the rouge around the edges for a finished and soft appearance.

Never rub powder into face. Pat or fluff, then smooth lightly with a powder blending brush, which Miss Mason calls, "a necessity, not a luxury."

Here are some other hints by Miss Mason for the college girl's beauty regime: Use cream to remove make-up, followed by soap and water cleansing, if you like. Then apply skin freshener, and a protective lotion for a make-up base. Apply a texture cream at night to replenish natural oils. Keep the skin thoroughly clean, as the basis of complexion beauty. Use a minimum amount of make-up. Strive for a natural effect. Reserve eye make-up for night functions.

Test Fitness By Exercise, Miss Ley Urges

By Ida Jean Kain

HERE IS AN IDEA which, I am positive, would never occur to you: That of taking a few tetats for physical fitness in the morning before you start out and staying at home the days you failed to pass.

This time, you can't blame me for thinking up ways to make life hard. The idea of fitness tests was originated by Maria Ley, one of the instructors in the unique dramatic workshop of the New School for Social Research, a brilliant actress in her own right, and by way of being an authority on bodily movement as a factor in creating an impression.

"Fitness is as necessary to success as intelligence or charm," she declares, "I do not believe it possible for a person who is only intelligent to continue to succeed unless care of the physical condition makes that person strong enough to stand up under the strain and stress of competition."

Test Exercises

Miss Ley maintains that it is much easier to give the impression of being witty and charming than that of being fit. For that reason, she thinks it wouldn't be such a bad plan to go through a test series of exercises before beginning the work day.

Since she is so thoroughly sold on fitness, you might expect that hours of exercise would be enthusiastically advocated. But not at all. It is like the person with musical talent. It used to be considered quite in the line of duty to devote 10 or 12 hours a day to steady practice, but now five or six is plenty "because one uses one's head. A 15-minute period of exercise when the mind is working is much more valuable than a whole hour of disinterested exercise." No one should ever exercise when tired, as the mind woolgathers.

And stretching and bending exercises are good—they involve the principle of attraction and repulsion—and, beside, that is the way one walks. The leg is bent, then stretched with each step.

Patterned on Ballet

As might be expected from a ballerina, Miss Ley believes implicitly in exercises patterned on ballet. "No matter what may be said against it," she says, "ballet, practiced correctly, has certain fundamental things in its favor." The average woman can gain a sense of balance and a better posture, she thinks, simply by standing on one foot, both legs straight, and swinging the free leg from the hip in circles and kicks. "When the swinging leg ceases to be a weight and you feel all of a piece, you have acquired something of balance." For suppling try this: Stand with heels together, toes turned out at sides, flex the knees, and spring into the air.

It is always a pleasure to tell you about someone whose theories are so original—and so convincing. If a girl with ambitions to become an actress is willing to pay her money to learn to keep fit and to move beautifully, there must be a great advantage to it.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

Stuffed Eggplant

LATE summer vegetable markets are gay these days with a large selection of colorful products of the truck gardener's tending. Perhaps the most dramatic of these vegetables is the smooth, deep purple eggplant.

The eggplant is a food that can be baked and featured whole in the center of a vegetable platter. Such a platter might also have yellow sweet corn and slices of red tomatoes. If you want to make such a platter, here is the recipe:

Stuffed Eggplant

Cook one whole eggplant in boiling water for 10 minutes. Cut lengthwise slice from top of eggplant. Remove pulp with a spoon, leaving a substantial shell. Chop pulp. Add 1 cup bread croutons. Fry 4 strips of bacon, cut in squares. Brown 1 tablespoon minced onion in bacon fat. Add to eggplant pulp. Add 1 egg and season with salt and pepper. Fill eggplant shell with mixture.

Top with corn flakes crumb topping made as follows: Roll 2 cups corn flakes into fine crumbs, combine with 1 egg yolk, ½ teaspoon dry mustard, 1 teaspoon lemon juice and ¼ teaspoon salt. Cover stuffed eggplant with crumb mixture, dot with butter and sprinkle with paprika. Bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 25 minutes. Serve on a platter with corn on the cob and fresh sliced or quartered tomatoes.

IT'S ABOUT TIME to make Victorian three-dimension pictures for shadow-box frames. Cut cardboard to fit—paste construction paper over it. Paste and sew to this the "flower arrangement." Picture is made of old buttons, feathers, beads, lace, ribbons, braids, etc.

Miss Acheson Planning Wedding in September

Ceremony and Reception to Be Attended Only by the Immediate Families and a Few Close Friends

With her wedding date set for September 27, Miss Jane Acheson will have her hands full for the next week or so. However, the daughter of the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Dean Acheson, plans to take off for a two weeks' rest in New England after seeing that the wedding invitations, reception plans and bridal tulle are in order. She is making plans for a very small ceremony and reception to be attended by the immediate families and a few close friends.

Mrs. Alan Kirk, wife of Capt. Kirk, director of naval intelligence, will entertain at a party—possibly a luncheon—on the day of the wedding in honor of the bridesmaids and ushers. The night before the ceremony the Assistant Secretary and Mrs. Acheson will be hosts at a dinner in honor of their daughter and her fiance, Dudley Bradstreet Williams Brown, of Dobbs Ferry, N. Y. He is the son of Col. and Mrs. Franklin Quimby Brown, of Dobbs Ferry.

The ceremony will take place at 4:30 o'clock in historic St. John's Church in Georgetown. The reception will be given at the Achesons Georgetown residence on P Street. The Rev. F. Bland Tucker will officiate at the ceremony.

To Marry In Georgetown

Miss Acheson has chosen her sister, Miss Mary Acheson, as maid of honor. The bridemaids will be Miss Ann Wilkinson, Miss Alice Barry, Miss Mary Wilson, Miss Patricia Griffin, Miss Rita Nash, of Warrenton, and Miss Sally Knapp, of Syracuse, N. Y.

Franklin Quimby Brown, jr., of New York City, will serve as best man for his brother. Among those who have been chosen as ushers are John Appel, of Philadelphia, Pa., John Brandin, of Boston, Mass., Charles Cunningham and Elisha Lee, of Rye, N. Y.

According to present plans the couple will make their home on Long Island but of course they are subject to change as Mr. Brown is an officer in the United States Naval Reserve and subject to active duty on a moment's notice.

Just about the time the bride-elect hopes to get away for a brief vacation—that will be in about two weeks—Mr. and Mrs. Acheson are planning a jaunt to New England. They will visit the Librarian of Congress and Mrs. Archibald MacLeish at their home in Conway, Mass. During their series of visits they also expect to be guests of the Special Assistant to the Secretary of State and Mrs. Harvey Bundy, who have a home in Manchester, Mass.

The engagement of Miss Acheson and Mr. Brown was announced last month at a large luncheon given by Mr. and Mrs. Acheson at their summer home in Sandy Springs, Md., Harewood Farm.

Whether to have the small wedding at their home here on Edgemoor Lane or at their country estate in Carroll County, Brick House Farms, has not been decided by the bride-elect and her parents.

The place, Goose Creek Tavern;
The date, 22 (that's a Friday)
And here's a suggestion for you—
Will each lady put on Sadie Hawkins' attire,

If you fail to appear you will always regret it.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Tartiere, of Middleburg are saddened by the news of the death of their son, Lieut. Jack R. Tartiere, who was killed fighting with the Free French forces. A memorial service was held for him yesterday morning at St. John's Catholic Church in Leesburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Tartiere received word a few days ago that Lieut. Tartiere had died. A cablegram sent to the British Embassy by Gen De Gaulle read: "Lieut. Jack Tartiere of the Foreign Legion was badly wounded June 9 during a dangerous mission for which he volunteered and executed with great bravery. He died in the base hospital at Sarafan, Palestine. He gained the admiration of everyone for his courage and fortitude. Signed, Gen. De Gaulle."

* * * *

JACK TARTIERE enlisted at the beginning of the war as liaison officer and served with the First Battalion of the Coldstream Guards. When the campaign in Norway started he volunteered and was attached to the Foreign Legion. He won the Medaille Militaire and the Croix de Guerre. Lieut. Tartiere took the last boat leaving Brest for England and after the fall of France joined the Free French forces of Gen. De Gaulle and was sent to West Africa, then to Abyssinia, where he won the English Military Cross at the siege of Keren in Eritrea, and another palm to his Croix de Guerre.

Lieut. Tartiere was born in France and educated at Wixenford and Beaumont, and graduated from the Sorborne. He has visited his parents frequently in Middleburg since they arrived several years ago to make their home there. Everyone loved this fine, handsome boy, whose twenty-sixth birthday is the last of this month. He had planned to return here to live after the war.

The young man left America in 1938. The letters his father received from him are full of interest with wonderful descriptions of what he was doing and going through. A letter dated March 20, said in part:

* * * *

"THE FIRST DAY of Spring! In most of Europe the snowdrops and crocuses are bursting and I suppose little boys in the country are still watching in longing anticipation the birds gathering twigs to make their nests, from which they will rob the eggs for their collection. And what dull birds to us, who march in a country where the sky is spotted with eagles, buzzards, vultures, and hawks; around the rare water holes the air-filled with doves, parakeets and blue and gold birds of paradise."

In his last letter to his father, Jack wrote, after describing a battle, "Fear only comes when you can do nothing but wait for the next one." Numbers of Jack Tartiere's friends and friends of his parents attended the services yesterday and the whole community is saddened. His father, who fought in the last World War, was awarded the Military Cross just about 28 years ago. He is crushed today, but must be sadly proud of the many honors bestowed upon his gallant young son.

Board Planned To Unify Rule Over Priorities

Plans for a powerful priorities policy board, to direct the broad course of priority and allocation of critical raw materials for defense and civilian purposes, will soon be submitted to President Roosevelt by Judge Samuel I. Rosenman of the New York State Supreme Court, it was indicated yesterday.

Rosenman, a long-time associate and confidant of the President, is said to be recommending two or three proposals, differing in minor details but designed to unify control now split between the OPM and the Office of Price Administration.

The top group proposed, it was believed, is a seven-man board composed of the present OPM Council—William S. Knudsen, Sidney Hillman, War Secretary Stimson and Navy Secretary Knox—OPACS Administrator Leon Henderson, Vice President Wallace and a seventh member, as yet unselected, drawn from civilian life and who would be charged with the welfare of civilian consumers.

Rumors Denied

At his press conference yesterday, Mr. Roosevelt acknowledged that Rosenman was making the study as part of a continuing policy to iron out specific difficulties and barriers in the defense program, but flatly denied rumors that an overall defense reorganization, or anything like it, was contemplated.

He also characterized as pure invention stories, circulated yesterday in Congressional circles, that Wallace was being considered to head a "super defense" body.

Rosenman's plans for a high policy board are designed to end a conflict of many weeks' standing between OPACS and OPM over the location of authority to issue priority orders among civilian industries, to allocate raw materials among competing nonmilitary demands, and principally, to determine priorities and material allocations for so-called "indirect" military purposes, such as pipe lines, freight cars, power plants and the like.

Auto Cut Posed Problem

The conflict came to a head recently over the method of curtailing production of automobiles, with Henderson indicating that he would cut materials so that 50 per cent auto curtailment would ensue immediately. The OPM, on the other hand, preferred a more gradual reduction.

Rosenman's proposal, it was said, would lift the duty of allocation of materials for civilian purposes from OPACS and place it under the OPM.

Certain defense officials have contended that it is impossible to separate priorities and allocations into various parts to be administered by different agencies, and that Rosenman's study calls for "reuniting the inseparable."

"Super-Setup" Rumors Persist

Despite the President's denial, and specific statements from Rosenman that his study is limited to the OPM-OPACS dispute, it was persistently rumored that out of the study, and out of the priorities policy group, there might emerge the "germ" of a future, over-all, revamping of the defense set-up.

Specifically, the board was seen as a possible first step toward a civilian planning agency, to plot the long-range requirements of both the military and the civilian economy, to plan for the conversion of civilian plants to defense production, and to provide for raw materials and finished production machinery.

Reorganization Advocated

A reorganization of the defense agencies to this end, and the possible lifting of the military procurement function from the Army and Navy, have been widely advocated as a long overdue remedial measure to step up bogging down defense production and to ease growing strains and dislocations in the civilian economy.

The principal one of these dislocations, unemployment and shut-down factories resulting from diversion of materials to defense plants, was attacked yesterday by the OPM, which announced a "sweeping revision" of Army and Navy purchasing policies in order to spread work and increase subcontracting.

Details of the revisions, and the increased importance of the OPM's defense contract service, charged with stimulating subcontracting in plants faced with shutdowns, appeared in The Post last Sunday.

Mark Sullivan's Column:

AAA Policy on Wheat Sales Held Strangely Contradictory

THIS is about two lots of wheat. The two are strangely related, in a bill now before President Roosevelt for approval or veto.

I shall not try to explain the intricate bill, but only the fundamental factor involved.

Lot number 1 we may speak of as collectivist-owned wheat. It is in the custody of Triple-A (The Commercial Credit Corporation). The amount is upward of 20 million bushels. It was acquired in the following manner:

Eight years ago Triple-A set out to increase the price of wheat (and other crops.) They used several devices. One was to make advances of money to farmers, so that the farmers need not throw their wheat on the market, and thus depress the price. These advances were called "loans," but they were an extraordinary kind of loan. The farmers need not repay, if they did not want to. Ordinarily, if the price of the wheat in the market was not equal to or above the amount of the loan, the farmer did not repay. In such case, Triple-A just kept the wheat. By this process, over many years, Triple-A has acquired its present store.

This wheat Triple-A now wishes to sell, for wheat has reached a fairly good price. But to Triple-A's proposal to sell its wheat, farmers and others enter strong objection. They say that sale of this Triple-A wheat would depress present prices. To this Triple-A replies that sale of its wheat would not depress the price at all. Triple-A is extremely earnest in its determination to sell. Against protests, in Congress or elsewhere, they cry out in angry self-righteousness.

TURN now to the second lot of wheat. This lot is individualist owned. It is owned and held by the farmers who raised it. The aggregate of it I do not know—it is perhaps 25 to 50 million bushels, maybe more. The circumstances of this individualist-owned wheat are as follows:

Last October farmers in various parts of the country planted wheat (in other sections they planted in April.) They planted as many acres as they wished. There was no restriction on how much they might plant. The quota system had not been applied to wheat.

This wheat, planted in October, grew until May 31. By that time it was almost fully grown—it would be ripe for harvesting about July 1.

In this condition, with the wheat more than half grown, Triple-A put the quota system on wheat. The quota system means that farmers may grow and sell only as many acres as Triple-A says they may. If they grow more, they are penalized.

So far as the quota system has any reason or justice at all, it should, of course, be applied before the crop is planted. But in the case of wheat this year, the quota system was not put in force until the wheat was within four or five weeks of being ripe for reaping.

THIS PUT tens of thousands of farmers in the situation: They had planted in October. In May they were told they had planted more than their quotas. The growing wheat fields on these farms were divided into two parts. One part was declared by Triple-A to be legally grown; it was within the quota. This part, the farmer could go ahead and harvest and sell at his discretion, without penalty.

But the other part of the field was declared to be illegally grown—it was above the quota for the particular farm. The wheat on this part of the field could not be sold except by first paying the Triple-A a penalty of 49 cents a bushel. That is about half the current price of the wheat; it is a prohibitive penalty.

To protests from farmers, and in Congress, Triple-A is stern. That over-quota wheat must not be sold; that prohibitive penalty must remain in force. Triple-A says, among other arguments, that sale of the over-quota wheat would depress the current price.

Observe the contradiction in point of view. The sale of the individualist-owned wheat would depress the market. But sale of Triple-A owned wheat would not depress the market.

THIS contradiction, however, is trivial. All conditions having to do with depressing the market or not are trivial. The fundamental factor here is the arbitrary control over the farmer which Triple-A asserts.

Triple-A tells the farmer, after his wheat is more than half grown, that some of it is over-quota. Not only do they forbid him to sell this over-quota wheat. They take the position that he must not even feed it to the cattle and hogs on his farm, if those hogs and cattle are later to be sold—he can only feed it, legally, to such cattle and hogs as he expects to consume on the farm, as the food of his own family.

Other than paying 49 cents a bushel penalty for the privilege of selling the wheat, the farmer is given only two ways out. One is, he may make a present of the over-quota wheat to Triple-A, just give it to them without cost. That sounds fantastic, but it is what Triple-A says.

The other way out permitted by Triple-A is that the farmer may store his over-quota wheat until next year. Then, in planting next year, he must first conform to the Triple-A quota. Further than that, he must deduct from the acreage he is permitted to plant, as many acres as would be equal to the over-quota wheat from the present year which is still on his hands.

The Gallup Poll

Many Dissatisfied With Defense Output

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 19.—The American public is more pleased with the progress of defense production now than it was six months ago, but a substantial number of voters are still far from satisfied. Despite the publicity given to gains in production of aircraft and other material, the proportion of people who think America's production is not going ahead fast enough is larger than the proportion who think it is.

Strikes and labor disputes and lack of coordination among defense officials in Washington are chiefly to blame for defense lags, in the opinion of those voters who are not satisfied.

39 Per Cent Are Satisfied

Today's survey is the second conducted in recent months on the defense production issue. Each survey asked the same question:

"Do you think America's production of arms, airplanes and other war materials is going ahead fast enough?"

TODAY
Satisfied	39%
Dissatisfied	43

SIX MONTHS AGO
Satisfied	30%
Dissatisfied	53
No Opinion	17

A second question in today's survey was put to all persons who said they were not satisfied with defense production.

"What do you think is the chief reason why production isn't going ahead faster?"

When that same question was asked six months ago, the chief factors named were strikes, politics and red-tape in Government, shortage of plants and materials, and lack of organization in the defense set-up.

Chief Factors Listed

The chief factors blamed today, with the percentage of dissatisfied voters naming each factor, follow:

Strikes and labor disputes	48%
Lack of coordination in administering the program	18
Fifth column activities and sabotage	6
Lack of materials	4
Sending too much material abroad	3
Lack of plants and equipment	3
Lack of enthusiasm and cooperation in the defense plants	3
Graft	2
Started expanding too late	1
Small plants not getting enough contracts	1
Other reasons	8
No answer	3

Several things are of interest in this list.

Whereas lack of organization in the defense set-up was ranked only fourth in importance six months ago, it is today considered the second most important factor. In the period since the last survey many leaders, notably Congressman Joseph Martin, Massachusetts Republican, have criticized the Administration's defense organization and called for drastic changes. The President early this month appointed his intimate adviser, Samuel I. Rosenman, to draft a plan for reorganizing and speeding up defense production.

Anothre noteworthy fact about the above list is the virtual absence of any criticism of manufacturers and big business leaders. It is the Government and labor, rather than businessmen, who are being criticized chiefly by the public.

The Federal Diary

Agriculture Continues Moving Out Voluntarily

Agriculture Department is continuing to decentralize while other agencies are waiting to be forced to send some of their employes to the field. Agricultural Adjustment Administration is scattering 60 employes of the examining unit in nine different State offices in the Northeast region. Another 100 employes in the same unit will escape transfer, it's estimated, by shifting to other jobs in the department. Farm Security also is decentralizing. Eighteen employes in its field investigation unit for the Southeastern States have been ordered to new headquarters at Richmond. FSA also is sending five medical officers and their staffs to Upper Darby, Pa. The shifts will be made around September 15.

Meanwhile, a decentralization report is being drafted in the Budget Bureau for consideration by the President. Federal Works Administrator John Carmody is said to be helping with the report. It's understood that the report will urge the President to order out of Washington several agencies that have refused to budge without getting the orders direct from the President himself.

James M. Maxon, who up until a year ago was assistant to Leonard Mosby, Bituminous Coal Division information director, is now assisting the Royal Air Force to bomb Berlin. He is a gunnery sergeant with the R. A. F. and he participated with the first Canadian squadron that bombed the German capital. His friends here received word that Maxon not only unloosened a load of bombs on Berlin on his first trip over but also a half a dozen empty milk bottles.

The Board of Legal Examiners has issued a regulation which will protect the Civil Service eligibility of Federal attorneys who are transferred or promoted between July 1 and January 1. The regulation is similar to a previous order that protects the eligibility of all other Federal workers who are affected by the Ramspeck Act . . . Nathan H. David has resigned from the legal staff at Federal Communications to join the staff of Coordinator of Information William J. Donovan . . . The bill is now law that gives Federal employes called to military service a chance to be paid for their accumulated annual leave.

Cheers for Henderson

Leon Henderson is having his troubles with members of Congress in his attempt to get legislation to fix prices, but he's a hero to Negro messengers and other low-paid help at the Capitol. Many of these employes have personally complained to Henderson about rising prices on his trips to the Hill. On the day after the raw sugar price was fixed, Henderson was greeted in the Capitol by a messenger who bellowed: "I told my wife you'd fix things. Nice work."

Accountants are needed by the Government. The Office of Emergency Management has inserted classified ads in hundreds of newspapers for accountants and yesterday the Civil Service Commission announced a new accountant test. The jobs pay from $2600 to $5600. Applicants will be rated on education and experience. Experience as audit clerk won't be considered. . . . An exam for junior Wage and Hour inspector at a salary of $2000 also has been announced. Residents of the District, Maryland and Virginia are eligible to apply . . . Civil Service Commission election committee: Emil Barish, Donn Bent, Clara Demuling, Dr. John Donovan and Lewis H. Fisher.

The smelly Archives case is at last coming to a head after a two-year fight. The Civil Service Commission disqualified two Archives officials two years ago but they are still in their jobs today. A hearing has been set for the first week in September on the cases. R. D. W. Connor, who has resigned as Archivist, has asked to be heard, apparently in behalf of the defendants. Connor has kept them in their jobs.

Draft Status Of 70,000 Here Found 'Secret'

Classifications of nearly 70,000 registrants here are still being held in comparative secrecy, it was learned by The Post yesterday, despite a publicity provision included in the service extension bill signed by President Roosevelt Monday.

In compliance with this law, National Selective Service headquarters late Monday night advised all local boards that they must post conspicuously in their offices the names and classifications of registrants who were classified or reclassified on or after that date.

This provision was made, it was said, in order that all registrants may ascertain the classifications of other registrants in their board.

Clerks Issue Figures

However, the bill did not provide for the posting of classifications of men already classified by their local boards when the law became effective. Each local board has a large reserve of men who have received their classifications and whose names therefore need not be published by the local boards.

Local Board 17 has 5215 registrants, 3167 of whom had already received their classifications. Local Board 2 has 3648 registrants, 1795 of whom had been classified. Local Board 1 has 4544 registrants with 1651 classified. These figures were given by the chief clerks of the respective local boards.

When asked if the general public has access to the classifications of those registrants already classified The Post received conflicting answers. The majority, however, declared that the records were not available to the general public unless they have a very good reason for wanting to see them.

Both national and local selective Service headquarters declared the classifications of all registrants are open to the public. They called attention to paragraph 166 of the Selective Service regulations which says records other than confidential records of the local boards "shall be available for public information provided inquiries do not interfere with the dispatch of business."

Local boards, however, have put different interpretations upon what "interferes with the dispatch of business."

Local draft headquarters said there were 119,000 registrants in the local boards with nearly 70,000 classified. According to their understanding, said members of the local boards, classifications will be posted from last Monday on. Nothing, however, will be done about posting classifications of those registrants already classified.

N. Y. Orchardists At Winchester On Valley Tour

Winchester, Va., Aug. 19.—Approximately 400 orchardists from New York arrived in Winchester this afternoon to spend the night before continuing a tour which will take them through the heart of the Shenandoah Valley orchard country, to Luray and the Skyline Drive, Front Royal and to Senator Byrd's Rosemont orchard near Berryville before their return to this city, Wednesday evening.

On Thursday morning, the orchardists will leave for Washington, D. C. The tour, sponsored by the New York State Horticultural Society, the New York State College of Agriculture and Farm Bureaus in the fruit counties of that State came to Winchester from Kearneysville, W. Va., where the visitors were guests of the West Virginia Horticultural Society for luncheon, today.

Their first stop, after leaving Winchester orchards tomorrow will be Turkey Knob orchid near Mount Jackson, after which they will be entertained at the estate of Frank Whissler, former president of the Virginia Horticulaural Society.

3 Hurt in Cave-in At Radford Plant

Radford, Va., Aug. 19 (AP).—Three men employed in the construction of the 44 million-dollar Radford ordnance works were injured last night when caught in a cave-in of a ditch on an uncompleted powder line.

Harvey East was said at the plant hospital to have suffered possible internal injuries. Mark Kiefer and Edd Janney were said to have suffered minor injuries.

To Save Gas

Cab Drivers Asked to Cut Cruising

Voluntary curtailment of taxicab cruising to conserve gasoline was requested yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission.

Compliance with the recommendation may prevent "more drastic action in the future," says a commission letter which will be sent today to all drivers, owner-operators, taxicab associations and companies.

Meantime, Washington headquarters of the American Automobile Association advised motorists to continue necessary use of their cars, including vacation travel, but to eliminate useless driving.

The utilities commission's form letter points out that the taxi cruising curb was suggested by Petroleum Coordinator Harold L. Ickes, who urged that it be practiced "as much as possible without placing an undue burden upon the operator."

More Hackstands?

Signed by E. J. Milligan, P. U. C. secretary, the letter asks drivers to observe all regulations and laws pertaining to street cruising. Fred A. Sager, chief engineer of the commission, is now studying methods of reducing the practice. One possible remedy is the establishment of more hackstands.

In that connection, the letter says:

"The Public Utilities Commission, with the approval of the joint board, has established numerous taxicab stands adjacent to fire hydrants in the downtown shopping area. Observation reveals that very little use is made of such public space. The Commission believes that greater use of these facilities would do much to conserve gasoline and oil."

Milligan revealed receipt of a letter from Ralph K. Davies, Acting Petroleum Coordinator, asking the P. U. C. to study possible reforms which would eliminate considerable taxicab "deadheading."

Would End "Deadheads"

Davies, who said his query was at the suggestion of a certain Senator, cited particularly the situation of Airport Transport, Inc., whose cabs are not permitted to pick up fares en route back to the airport after having deposited a passenger at his destination.

Similarly, Davies pointed out, other taxicabs are permitted to take fares from the District to the airport but, under existing regulations, are prohibited from picking up passengers there, therefore must "deadhead" it back to town.

The District No. 1 Marketing Committee, representing the Eastern area, where gasoline rationing is in effect, is to meet in New York today to formulate a system which will guide filling stations in dealing with their customers.

Senator Maloney (Democrat) of Connecticut, yesterday advocated creation of a five-man Senate committee to investigate the Eastern oil shortage.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Hagerstown, Md., Aug. 19.—The officer personnel of the two Home Guard companies here was completed last night, when Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor announced the appointment of J. Vincent Jamison, 3d, as a captain attached to the staff of Lieut. Col. William Preston Lane, jr., commander of the Eighth Battalion, of which the two companies will be a part.

W. Edward Heimel and Alfred S. Bendell, jr., were named first lieutenants and J. Frank Elliott and J. R. Ray Black as second lieutenants. Thirty applications for enlistment already have been received.

McCarran Asks Crime Bills Be Speeded

Early Senate action on the vagrancy and habitual criminal bills was urged yesterday by Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the District Senate Committee.

Senator McCarran expressed his wish for speedy action to R. F. Camalier, municipal attorney for the Senate District Committee, in a phone conversation, Camalier said. The Senator is out of the city at the present time.

Other sources on Capitol Hill rumored that strong efforts may be made to defeat the habitual criminal bill which has been passed by the House.)

The bill carries proportionately heavy punishments for second, third and fourth offenders in crimes of violence, and is advocated as a measure to cut the District's crime rate by putting habitual offenders behind bars for longer periods of time.

Representative Jennings Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, chairman of the House District Committee, expressed the hope Monday that the Senate would see fit to act on the matter quickly.

25,000 See Legion March In Alexandria

Senior and junior bands from Danville and Clifton Forge, respectively, were selected as the outstanding units in the annual convention parade of the Virginia department of the American Legion yesterday in Alexandria, as an estimated 3000 marchers paraded the length of King Street in one of the most colorful demonstrations seen in the city in a decade.

The senior band sponsored by Danville's American Legion post was selected as the outstanding unit in its class, and was awarded a cash prize of $50, while a similar award went to the Clifton Forge independent band chosen as the best all around unit in the junior division. In the only other competitive event the color guard of the Norfolk American Legion post was adjudged the outstanding color unit in the line of march, and was given a year's possession of the Department of Virginia's State flag.

To the marshal airs of 15 drum and bugle corps and bands, approximately 100 units marched in the procession, which required a full hour to pass a given point. An estimated 25,000 persons thronged Alexandria's principal business thoroughfare to witness the parade, which included Army, Navy and Marine Corps troops in addition to the musical and patriotic organizations.

The parade was held following routine business sessions of the American Legion and its auxiliary, which met separately in preparation for the closing sessions today. Both bodies will elect officers this morning, and a convention site for 1942 will be selected.

Last night convention delegates and visiting legionnaires were entertained at a reception at the Ford Motor Co.'s Alexandria plant, where the program was featured by an exhibit of equipment being manufactured by the firm in the national defense program. At the close of the exhibit, the delegates boarded a steamer at the Ford wharf and were taken on a four-hour cruise down the Potomac.

Newlyweds Robbed Of All Luggage

Gettysburg, Pa., Aug. 19.—Two newlyweds who visited the Gettysburg Battlefield on Sunday on their honeymoon had all their luggage stolen from their parked automobile while they climbed an observation tower atop Big Round Top. Mr. and Mrs. Kermit Merrick, Meridian, N. Y., reported to H. E. Smiley, sergeant of the park guards, that handbags containing clothing and other valuables worth more than $200 were taken.

Officials Call Brookings Plan Radical

Would Scrap Time-Honored System, Assert Montgomery Heads

Government of Montgomery County, Md., by an administrator and a nine-member nonpartisan council—as proposed by the Brookings Institution's report last March—was described yesterday by the county board of commissioners as a "revolutionary reversal of fundamental American governmental principles."

Criticism of the Brookings recommendations was embodied in a resolution adopted by the county governing board at its meeting in Rockville. Voting in favor of the resolution were Board President Thomas E. Hampton and Commissioners O. W. Roby, R. W. Farmer and John Oxley. Commissioner Walter Johnson, only Republican board member, was absent.

The resolution called for appointment of a committee of county citizens "to work out a practical application of whatever in the recommendations . . . may appear valuable and wise for incorporation in the government institutions of Montgomery County without recourse to the scrapping of such fundamental and time-proven safeguards and checks and balances of American, Maryland and local free democratic institutions as the party system, the direct nomination and election of county commissioners, members of the State Legislature and other county officials."

The resolution stated:

"The sweeping changes in governmental plan proposed for the county by the report include revolutionary reversal of fundamental American governmental principles, strike down representation by direct elections and remove the bulwarks that have safeguarded the democratic principles of our local republican form of government.

"1. By wiping out by law the established two-party system proven by many generations of American and English experience as the time-tested system through which free people can administer both their national and local governments; and also proven as the only system through which democratic institutions have ever, or we believe can, survive in this world and Nation;

"2. By creating a county administrative and legislative board of nine councilmen to be elected from nine districts; each councilman to be voted on in his district only, thus precluding the voters of every district from voting for the remaining eight councilmen from the other eight districts who in theory are supposed to equally represent the people of the entire county in making laws and administering the county government."

It was pointed out further that the proposed nine-member council was to have the power of appointing a "county manager."

The resolution asked for public consideration of "the opportunities that this proposal to divide Montgomery County into nine separate and distinct councilmanic districts present for log-rolling, deals and dickers between any five of the councilmanic representatives at the expense of the people in the other four districts of the county."

It was asserted that Brookings Institution, by agreement with the commissioners, had proposed to issue two sets of recommendations, one applying to the present basic form of county government and the other consisting of any proposed basic changes in the governmental structure. However, it was stated, the report "intermingles all recommendations" in one report.

The Brookings Institution report was issued March 16 after a more than two-year study of the county's government.

The commissioners' resolution pointed out that a number of the institution's recommendations had been enacted into law by the State Legislature last spring.

Dr. Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution, declined last night to comment on the commissioners' criticism.

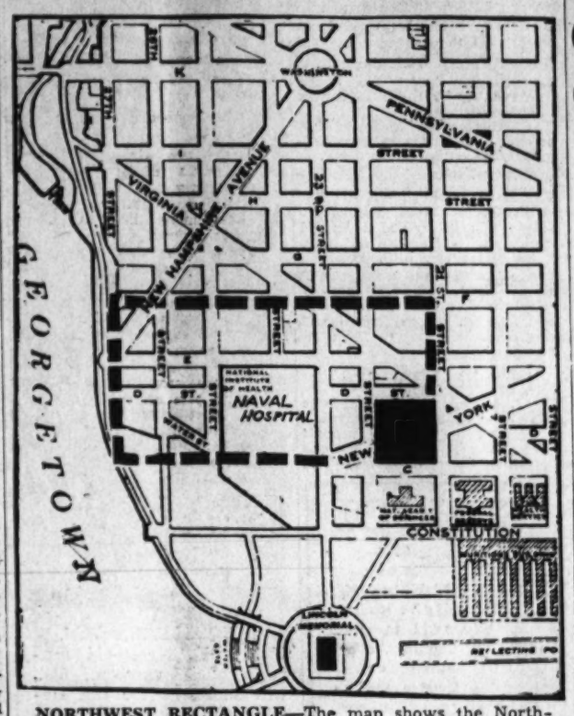
National Defense Center



NORTHWEST RECTANGLE—The map shows the Northwest Rectangle which President Roosevelt favors for the location of the new War Department Building. The blacked square in the rectangle, indicated by broken line, represents the 10 million dollar section of the War Department Building just completed at Twenty-first and C Streets. Proposed but unappropriated-for sections of the War Department Building would occupy the area between Twenty-first and Twenty-third Streets and from C to E Streets. The Navy Department Building, which the President suggests be built and then turned over to the War Department "for the duration," would be constructed on the Naval Hospital grounds. The Northwest Rectangle is an area planned years ago as a national defense center

Virgina Fear of Annexation Held Sign Measure Is Just

Evidence of the growth of "hysteria" on the part of Virginia residents who would become residents of Washington should the District's boundary lines be stretched across the Potomac indicates "great possibility" that District territory should be increased, Senate advocates of the measure said yesterday.

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the Senate District Committee, expressed this view in a long-distance phone conversation yesterday with R. F. Camalier, municipal attorney to the District Committee, Camalier said.

He declared that both Senator McCarran and himself were in agreement that "whenever one of two parties in a question becomes hysterical or fearful, there is a great possibility that the other party is right."

Quoting the Senator's sentiments in his own words, Camalier emphasized that "apprehension and fear have been transferred to the Virginia side of the Potomac. It would tend to indicate that our wish to increase District territory is right."

Senator Artnur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, a member of the District Committee, seconded the views expressed by Senator McCarran.

"The District ought to take back the territory which rightfully belongs to it," he said. "The new airport should by all means be in the District proper."

Senator Harold H. Burton (Republican), of Ohio, another member of the District Committee, inferred that the National Airport should be included in the District.

"In any city it's practicable for the municipal government to control the land on which its airport is situated," he said.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Mount Solon, Va., Aug. 19.—The Prince of Love and Beauty is Louis Proctor, of Millboro Springs. He won that honor by virtue of Miss Betty Knowleson's prowess in the annual riding tournament here, witnessed by more than 4000 spectators.

Miss Knowleson, of Chicago, who rode as the Lady of Big Ben Farm, placed second in the junior contest and crowned the blushing Mr. Proctor.

The senior tournament, which has been held in the shadow of Natural Chimneys for the past 120 years, was won for the third consecutive year by Proctor, who crowned Miss Knowleson as his "Queen of Love and Beauty."

There were 19 riders in the senior event, while 13 rode in the junior contest.

D. C. Heads Get Report On Police

Probers List of Recommendations For Improving Force Kept Secret

Laying "considerable stress" on the necessity for improved and modernized police training facilities, the report of the District's special committee assigned to investigate the Metropolitan Police Deparment is in the hands of the Commissioners for study today.

The report, containing some 43 specific recommendations, was given to Engineer Commissioner Kutz yesterday by Maj. Beverly S. Snow, chairman of the inquiry group.

Gen. Kutz declined to make public its contents. He said it would be "locked up" until the board has an opportunity to study it when Commissioner Young returns from vacation next Monday.

It is expected contents of the report will follow closely recommendations of the recently completed Congressional investigation. The three-man municipal probing group—Maj. Snow, Budget Officer Walter Fowler and Maj. James R. Lusby, disbursing officer—"sat in" on all hearings before the House subcommittee.

A highlight of the report, it was learned, is a strong proposal that "young blood" be kept in key positions within the Police Department.

Gen. Kutz said it had been "suggested" to him that police "pay more attention" to rounding up "floaters," nondescript strangers and other undesirable street loafers and he had agreed to "discuss the matter informally with the other Commissioners."

Md. County Ousts 5 York Children

Frederick, Md., Aug. 19 (AP).—Five children from York County, Pa., where there is an epidemic of infantile paralysis, were returned to their homes at request of Dr. E. C. Kefauver, county health officer.

Dr. Kefauver gave relatives of the children the alternative of quarantining the youngsters here, or returning them to their homes in and near York. The relatives decided to take them home, he said.

Both Frederick and Washington County health authorities warned families against taking their children into the Pennsylvania county over the State line to prevent the disease from spreading into Maryland.

Russians Fall Back 50 Miles, Dig In to Save Leningrad

Moscow (Wednesday), Aug. 20.—Entrenched in new positions after falling back 50 miles deeper into Russia on the Leningrad front, the Red army was reported battling a mammoth German encircling movement from the south and southwest today against the Soviet Union's second largest city.

The deepest Nazi penetration on this front was announced officially to have reached to the vicinity of Novgorod, 100 miles south of Leningrad and 50 miles northeast of Soltsi, where the previous heavy fighting had been reported.

Novgorod, on the north shore of Lake Ilmen, is some 40 miles west of the main Leingrad-Moscow rail line and the Red army command apparently was making a determined stand to smash the threat to this line. Communications between the two cities still were intact.

The communique also reported stubborn battles at Odessa and in the Gomel and Kingisepp areas. Gomel is on the central front, 140 miles north of Kiev. Kingisepp, from which Russian troops have been withdrawn, is 75 miles southwest of Leningrad.

The high command indicated that wherever Russian troops were falling back the retreat was orderly.

Nazis Bury Tanks

The army publication Red Star said the Germans were running into shortages of artillery and tanks and were burying tanks more and more for use as artillery pillboxes.

The early morning communique said the Red air force heavily bombed the Ploesti oil fields in Rumania and set off explosions and raging fires.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Van Arsdale's Record

LAST WEEK I was honored with an invitation from Jere P. Sullivan, the recording secretary of Local 3 of the Electrical Workers of the A. F. of L., to attend a membership meeting of this organization, which recently tied up all electrical construction work in New York, including war jobs at the Navy Yard, in an attempt to compel the employer to obey its will in violation of his agreement with another union.

Mr. Sullivan said the members were anxious to find out "if there is any truth in what you say in your recent reference to Harry Van Arsdale, jr., business manager of Local No. 3."

I doubt that Mr. Sullivan was speaking for the members, and suspect that he spoke for the union bosses, instead, but, in any case, the answer is that if I haven't proved on paper my "recent reference" to Mr. Van Arsdale, I couldn't prove them any more convincingly in a packed meeting with gunmen present to enforce discipline.

I said that Van Arsdale was now under conviction and sentence for rioting against the public peace and the authority of the established government in New York, and nothing I might say on a platform could be as effective as the official court records. Local No. 3 has plenty of lawyers, and any of these high-principled officers of the court may find proof of the truth of that "recent reference" in unquestionable legal form.

I also referred to the time that Van Arsdale was sentenced to Sing Sing after a trial in which he was convicted of shooting two fellow members of the union, and the fact that the two victims later withdrew their complaints, following the payment to them of $15,000 out of the union treasury which belonged to the workers, not to Van Arsdale. They said the money was by way of compensation for their injuries and was not a bribe or inducement to persuade them to forget their complaint against Van Arsdale, and the judge accepted this explanation and let Van Arsdale go.

THIS, too, can be confirmed in the records of the New York courts, which is where I got the information, and anyone who wants to dig further in the interests of enlightenment can discover that one witness to the shooting by name, at that time, Adelbert Letscher, was sprayed in the face with acid a few hours after he had appeared in the magistrate's court, where he gave testimony. Adelbert Letscher later testified again regarding the acid throwing as a State witness in the trial of Van Arsdale for shooting the two men. I say this brother's name was Adelbert Letscher and was booked under this name when arrested in a strike disorder of the same union a few months ago. Like the two men who got $15,000 of the workers' money to heal wounds which obviously were not inflicted by the whole membership, nor in their name, nor with their consent or approval, Litscher, formerly Letscher, ain't mad at Harry Van Arsdale no more.

I said that in the trial of Van Arsdale on a charge of shooting the two men, one of them, by name Sorenson, was asked a question regarding another brother named Harry Godell. Sorenson said Godell helped him up, after he fell wounded, and the prosecutor then asked, "Is he dead or alive?"

"HE is dead," Brother Sorenson replied. "He was murdered right afterward," which is a fact that the membership of Local No. 3 can verify in the homicide records of Bronx County, as I did. Unidentified men waylaid him on a dark street at night and shot him dead, and the murder has never been solved. The records of Van Arsdale's trial contain those very words: Q. "Is he dead or alive?" and "A. He was murdered right afterward."

This was objected to by the defense, and the objection was sustained on legal grounds, but the testimony remains in the transcript., nevertheless. And the fact also remains that Godell, who picked up Sorensen as he fell wounded, was murdered less than one month after Van Arsdale's indictment and before the trial at which he would have been a witness, had he lived.

In another "recent reference" I said flatly that Umbrella Mike Boyle, the boss of the Chicago local of the same predatory international union, was a crook, and if there is any doubt in Jere P. Sullivan's mind of the factual accuracy of the statement, he may convince himself by referring to the printed records of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, wherein the learned judges, upholding a sentence of the District Court, found that the prosecution had convincingly depicted Broth-er Boyle as "a highwayman, a betrayer of labor and a leech on commerce," and concurred in the jury's finding that Boyle was just a dirty extortioner operating under the authority of a union charter from the A. F. of L.

I am glad to give Mr. Sullivan these citations, and will give him chapter and verse if he insists, but I just don't believe the membership had anything to do with the invitation. My letters from rank and file union people convince me that they don't sound off in meetings, and that few of them would be reckless enough to insist that a stranger be invited in for giving them proof of "references" concerning the union's boss.

NAVAL HOTEL MANAGER. A phenomenal job of "doubling in brass" is being accomplished by Lieut. Richard F. Butler of the Navy who is also the manager of Hotel 2400 Sixteenth Street. As a member of the Naval Reserve, Lieut. Butler was recently called to duty in the Navy Department. At first it seemed that this would leave Hotel 2400 in something of a predicament. But Lieut. Butler solved the problem without flurry by just extending his working hours. From 8:30 to 3:30 he's at his desk in the Navy Department. From 4 until midnight or later he attends to the affairs of 2400.

Glen Echo's young dancers are so popped up over the "V" musical stunt and the midnight "Star-Spangled Banner" interlude that they're urging a "Victory Night" at the park. So Maestro Paul Kain is doing some heavy "V" thinking.

MADRILLON RETURNS. Don Shook, coleader of the MadrRion Orchestra (also known as "Dagwood") is expected back today from his California trip. Don and Carr van Sickler will play piano groups for the cocktail hour. . . Already back is Greeter Martin who made a grand tour around Lake Erie, Niagara Falls, New York and Asbury Park where he had a great time at an oriental restaurant specilizing in "Litle Egypt" dancing and oudh (a sort of Near East guitar) playing.

NEW MAYFLOWER PAPA. Saxaphonist Bob Simpson is the newest addition to the Mayflower Lounge Fathers' Club. The lovely new arrival is little Joyce Randolph Simpson, who put in an appearance at 2 a. m. just as Bob finished playing in the Lounge. Joyce is starting early to keep musicians' hours.

DARING DANCING pops up all through the Lotus' new "Capital Capers" revue. Szita and Enis perform a bolero so studded with dangerous and tricky whirls that is constantly interrupted with applause. Later they do a Russian dance that demands their all in technique and endurance . . . And Felicia Chase, petite acrodancer, seems to be made of rubber and whipcord for all her delicacy of appearance.

A new F Street spot to be called the "Four Hundred Club" will open this fall according to fairly loud whispers going the rounds.

CASINO ROYAL VIEWS. No end of folks of the entertainment seem to be spending their Sunday evenings in the Casino Royal. Last Sunday we saw Paul and Dave Young talking to friends about the forthcoming opening of their Romany Room; Johnny Longo, manager of El Patio with one of the beauties who nearly became "Miss Virginia"; Eddie Chase and Eileen O'eill, of Burt's Trans-Lux, Comedian "Moresey" Garner and Emcee Ernie Simon. . . . Maestro Jack Schafer is due back at the Casino Royal tomorrow evening after his Atlantic City vacation.

PUFFY, THE WONDER KITTEN. Singer Carmela Lazari, of Hi Hat, has a new pet, a frolicsome white kitten, she's christened Puffy because she looks just like a powder puff. Puffy gets on so well with Tippi-Tin, Carmela's cocker spaniel, that she even washes his face.

rhythms . . . The Anchor Room's "We Two" have their own version of "Tattooed Lady." They've written a flock of new lyrics for it. Nice naughty ones . . . Van Taylor of Restaurant "823" gives "Summertime" all the lift and dynamics that were written into it by Hoagy Carmichael—but are often permitted to ooze away by careless performers . . . "Our Love Affair" becomes lovely all over again when sung by Marty Rubin in the Pall Mall Room . . . And you haven't heard "Daddy" at all until you've heard Parley Eaton's vitaminized version of it in the Rainbow Room.

The silk shortage is really worrying Dancer Nieta of the Shoreham Terrace. It takes 30 yards of silk to make one of her Spanish dancing costumes. And she'll need a whole new set of them this fall.

SENATORS' BEGINNINGS. The name of the Senators, now at Mayfair, was suggested 10 years ago in Albany's Ten Eyck Hotel by Ed Staunton, then secretary to Jimmy Walker. . . . Last year the Senators were a top hit at that pet rendezvous for artists and writers, the Pelican Club at Palm Beach. They vow that newspaper columnist Danton Walker is one of the best rumba dancers in the country.

"KNIGHTINGALE." That's the new name for Evelyn Knight, of the honey hair and voice, who sings in the King Cole Room. It was the inspiration of a customer after listening to Evie warble as she sat on top of the bar.

OF BEVERAGES. That "torpedo cocktail" served on the Starlight Roof is made of aloe gin and brandy. It only took three torpedoes to sink the Bismarck, didn't it? . . . The "Sir Harrington mint julep" at the Harrington Tavern is a prize example of this classic potion. . . . The inspired mixologists at the Neptune Room are always producing new beverages. Just look at the corner of the menu and you'll probably find some tantalizing surprise.

RIVER BEND might almost be named the "Fort Belvoir Club." There's never an evening that you can't see bunches of the Belvoir officers enjoying dancing to George Stein's music or a chicken dinner as a change from Army fare. . . . River Bend's prize weekly shindig, the "Piggy Party," is on again this evening.

Something terrifically exciting is due to happen soon at the Nightingale. Can't give you details yet, but it looks as though Redd Raffell and his band is due to hook up with one of the country's most famous band leaders.

Text of Byrd's Speech Charging 'Miserable Failure' in Arms Production

Virginian Urges Reorganization Of Defense Setup Under One Head

(The text of the speech on United States preparedness efforts delivered to the Senate yesterday by Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, follows:

If democracy means anything it means that in times of great crisis the people should know the true facts upon which they must make vital decisions. Events in recent days make it more imperative than ever for the American people to know the truth about the progress of our defense program and aid to England.

From the beginning of the European conflict I have believed that the surest way for America to avoid war is to be ready for it and to furnish to England the war equipment she needs. Acting upon this premise, I have supported all defense appropriations. In fact, to this date, I have supported all of the foreign policies of the Administration presented to the Congress. I have supported all aid to England through the furnishing of military supplies. The avoidance of war, except to repel attack, by our own strong defense and by giving aid to England have been and will be the controlling influence in my official acts.

In any event, in my judgment, it would be an act of utter folly to become a voluntary shooting participant in the European conflict in our present state of unpreparedness.

The European war has been in progress for two years. Fourteen months ago France and Belgium fell. During this period, day by day and, in fact, hour by hour, by radio and newspaper publications glowing reports have been made by our officials to the people of America as to the satisfactory progress of our military preparations.

Cites 1940 Statement

A year ago, on August 25, 1940, I publicly called attention to the fact that in the 100 days following the President's speech on May 15, 1940, in which he called for 50,000 military planes—that in that 100-day period only 343 fighting planes were contracted for by the Army and Navy combined, and I further said that the lag in the entire defense program menaced seriously our security.

As construction of fighting planes requires 10 to 16 months, the need to place orders quickly during that period of a year or more ago was obvious.

President Roosevelt took cognizance of this statement of mine in his press conference the next day, August 26, 1940, and said, "Senator Byrd's figures are correct, but his implications dead wrong."

Since then I have refrained from making a public expression with respect to the delay and confusion in our preparedness program, hoping that as months went by order would come out of chaos, and that our defense program would go forward for the security and protection of our country. I have devoted my efforts, doing what I could to remove all obstacles to this program, one of the most serious being strikes in defense industries.

The War Department advises me that from January 1 to August 12, this year, 2,950,700 man-days were lost through strikes in War Department contracts alone. Moreover, the Navy Department advises that from January 1 to August 9, 2,151,000 man-days were lost in Navy Department contracts. This makes a total loss (exclusive of strikes in the construction of merchant vessels) in about 7 months of 5,101,700 man-days.

No one can deny that this loss of more than five million man-days since January 1 has had a serious effect resulting in delay of the production of war materials. It seems now that after a brief interval, strikes have started again. On August 16, the Navy Department reports that strikes were in existence, affecting approximately 18,000 men, and the War Department reports on August 16 that 30 strikes were in existence, with 25,200 men idle. But strikes in defense industries are only one of the causes of general confusion and dangerous delay existing in our program of preparedness.

An Executive Job

The Congress can be blamed often for delay, but in the program for the production of military equipment the record will show that the Congress has done its part promptly. Appropriation after appropriation has been passed, and in many instances without even such consideration as would be dictated by ordinary prudence. Everything in the name of national defense has had the right of way, nearly all authorizations and appropriations as requested by the Executive being passed unanimously.

The job of achieving national defense and giving aid to England has been and is an executive one. There must be efficient coordination of industry. Non-defense production must yield to defense needs. Above all else that effective and efficient machinery must be set up at Washington, unified in one head with power to act. There must be stoppage of strikes in defense production and the removal of every present obstacle to defense production, whether it is red tape or inefficient bureaucracy, or the refusal of business enterprise to cooperate.

The obligations confronting America today constitute a challenge to and a test of democracy such as never before have confronted us. We are required now to defend ourselves on two oceans and to protect the length of the Western Hemisphere—10,000 miles. We have guaranteed great quantities of military equipment to England, and it is now proposed to do the same for Russia. It is a colossal task to which we have set our hands and one that will test to the utmost our ingenuity, our fortitude, our zeal, and our patriotism. This is a war of machines more than of men.

Andre Maurois, renowned French author, said after the fall of France: "It is no mystery, but as a tragically simple explanation the battle of France was not lost in the Spring of 1940 but between 1935 and 1939 in the factories of France. It is not so much a military defeat as an industrial defeat. France worked 40 hours a week and Germany 80 hours."

SENATOR BYRD

U. S. Has Capacity

America has the capacity in labor and raw materials to outproduce any other nation in the production of mechanized equipment. In that job for the past two years we have failed and miserably failed, and the sooner we as a nation realize it the better we can remedy our mistakes and go forward.

We have not sent to England the aid we should and our own preparations have lagged dangerously, yet since the beginning of the European war we have spent for national defense nearly $10,000,000,000. What have we to show for this $10,000,000,000 already spent? This every American has the right to know. The colossal sum of $53,000,000,000 has been authorized and appropriated. This is twice as much as the cost of our participation in the last World War.

I desire to call to the attention of the Senate a statement made recently by William C. Bullitt, former Ambassador to France:

"We might have avoided getting into the position in which we now find ourselves if, at the outbreak of the present war on September 1, 1939, we had begun to produce airplanes and other implements of defense, and merchant ships, with all possible speed. By this time we should have enough to enable Great Britain to avoid the danger of being throttled. We did not produce with any speed at all.

"Even after the fall of France last June, when, as a Nation we should have been able to draw a clear conclusion and to heed the voices warning us that we were in deadly peril and that we must produce with as great speed as if we were in war, we did not do so. Until January of this year it was our policy to superimpose production for defense comfortably on the normal business of the country—in spite of the fact that we were aware that the same policy had led France to defeat and Great Britain to the brink of disaster, we took half measures. We talked big, but we did not deliver the goods.

"We knew last summer that the British wanted us to begin at once full speed construction of five million tons of merchant ships. . . .

"Fate never forgives loss of time. Hitler does not wait. Because we preferred business as usual to production at war speed, we now face conveying, with the obvious risk of finding ourselves at war."

In this day, with the possibility of grave peril ahead, the consequences of failure to meet this responsibility and this challenge to our democracy more expeditiously may be disastrous. Undoubtedly, it will prolong the European war. If fighting planes could have been sent to England in recent months in thousands instead of hundreds. The situation today would be vastly different. So far not a single antiaircraft gun or tank has gone to England and very few merchant ships. In the first 90 days after the passage of the seven-billion-dollar lend-lease bill, only 75 million dollars' worth of materials was sent to England.

The time has come now to deal with the American people frankly and openly. Today our security lies only in our strength. We are not getting prepared adequately. We are not giving aid to England quickly.

Confusion, due to conflicting and overlapping authority, exists to such a degree at Washington as virtually to stymie the whole defense program. The OPM and the OPACS are engaged in a bitter battle behind the scenes, and by Executive order they have been given conflicting authority. This is deeper than a mere jurisdictional argument. It involves an attempt on the part of some who would change the form of our Government under the guise of national defense. This is a continuance of the conflicting philosophies that have existed in our Government for eight years and which at least should be laid aside during the existing emergency.

All of the American people are deeply concerned over the status of our defense program. Not only are many billions being spent, which must be paid by taxation upon all the people, but national defense today and aid to England are vital to our security.

I stand responsible for the information I am giving to the Senate today. It is accurate in all essentials but, of course, may be approximate in some minor details. I present this very sad picture with regret, but I know of no other way to bring acutely before you the conditions that confront us.

TANKS

England needs tanks desperately, Lord Beaverbrook says. In modern warfare tanks are indispensable. On September 1, 1940, one year after the beginning of the war, we had only 521 tanks on hand, of which 246 were listed as obsolete and all the remainder as antiquated. Not a single modern tank did the United States possess one year after the European war began. Today, two years after the beginning of the European war, the situation is little better. As late as 60 days ago only 128 M-3 light tanks and only 1 of the M-3 medium tanks were on hand. Now, we are informed that the most effective medium tank, known as the T-6, will not get into production until May, 1942. Of the light tanks, no appreciable production will start until October, when it is expected 300 will be produced monthly. This is a small and belated beginning for the tanks needed for ourselves and for England. No heavy 50-ton tanks are in prospect or have been ordered. This is the type Hitler has used so effectively. As no orders have been placed, it is not likely that the year 1942 will see deliveries of any of the heavy tanks. Comparatively few light tanks, the M-2-A-4, and medium tanks, M-2-A-1, are on hand and in use for training, but this type will not be included in future orders. So, after two years, our tank production up to date is practically negligible.

Senator Gives Private Figures On Output of Vital War Equipment

ANTIAIRCRAFT GUNS

On September 1, 1940, one year after the war began, we actually had one antiaircraft gun of modern design, and it was a handmade model. We had no improved antiaircraft gun suitable to repel high-flying bombers. In fact, we had only 431 3-inch A-A guns in the Army, and this type has been discarded. Only a very few—about a dozen—of the 90 M-M guns yet have been delivered, and these have been for experimental purposes. The program provides for an average monthly delivery of only four 90 M-M guns for the four remaining months this year, and 22 per month for the year 1942. This is the only antiaircraft gun on order which will pierce the new armor and adequately attack high-flying bombers. There is a small number of the 37-MM antiaircraft guns being produced, but this gun is effective only against low-flying planes. America needs effective antiaircraft guns more than any other nation. We must protect our coast cities and fortifications on two oceans, our insular possessions, and especially the Panama Canal, which could be destroyed by bombing, with terrific results. Today all of the antiaircraft guns of modern design we have could not protect effectively a single city in the United States. In this vital weapon our two-year production has been negligible.

OUR NAVY

The American Navy is equal to or better than any other navy in the world. The Navy Department is well organized for expeditious action because our Nation has always been Navy-minded and has maintained a good naval organization at all times. We have about 333 major naval vessels, battleships, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. It is the best one-ocean Navy in the world. But now we need desperately a two-ocean Navy of at least 700 major vessels. This we will not have until 1946, five years hence, unless extraordinary means are adopted to speed production. For the year 1941, only 28 major naval vessels will be added—3 battleships, no aircraft carriers, no cruisers, 17 destroyers and 9 submarines.

MERCHANT SHIPS

In the war of the Atlantic, merchant ships and tankers are of first importance. Unarmored merchant ships should be built quickly. Yet, for the entire year of 1940 only 53 merchant ships and tankers were constructed in America, and for the entire year of 1941 only 105 merchant ships and tankers will be built. This production in 1941 is hardly more than the gross sinkings by the Germans in one of the heaviest casualty months.

In the first six months of 1941, only 33 merchant ships were built, and the estimated number of the last six months of 1941 is 45, and Admiral Land tells me that figure may be optimistic. Thus, we may have a total of 78 merchant ships for the full year, with a tonnage of 577,000. It is expected, in addition, to build only 27 tankers in 1941, making a total of 105 merchant ships and tankers for the full year. This number is woefully short of the need, and immediate steps must be taken to speed this production up.

PLANES

England's greatest need since the war began has been combat planes, and especially the heavy bombers. In fact, the current war has demonstrated planes are the greatest need of any country engaged in modern war. Germany's victories have been primarily due to fighting superiority in the air. During the entire first year of the European war we also made the error fatal to France and so disastrous to England. Although day by day, as the war progressed, airplanes were proving to be the deciding factor in the European combat, we woefully neglected our fighting planes. It takes from 10 to 16 months to produce fighting planes, yet only a few hundred were placed on order during the first-year period. On September 1, 1940, one year after the war began, the combined fighting air force of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps, equipped and suitable for front line fighting, was less than 800 combat planes. Now, two years after the war began, the state of production of combat planes is one of the most discouraging chapters in our national defense program.

In June, this year, the production of military planes declined below the production established in May. In the month of July a still more serious reduction occurred, when the total production of military planes fell 200 below the schedule. In fact, 16 less planes were produced in July, last month, than in June. In the month of July the total production of all military planes, fighters and trainers, both for ourselves and England, was 1460. Of this number, about 700 were training planes, which can be produced quickly and simply from standard designs. Only 760 were combat planes. Less than 300 were bombers of all kinds. In long range bombers so desperately needed, production now does not exceed 60 per month. Only 35 dive bombers were produced in May.

In all the Government publications on airplane construction, lump sum production is stressed, and trainers and fighters are combined, so the public is often confused. The distinction between combat planes and training planes may be emphasized by the fact that 500 man-days are required for the construction of the ordinary training plane, while an average of 600-man-days are needed for the construction of each combat plane. Training planes are, of course, necessary, but they can be produced quickly in mass production. Combat planes are what we are concerned about primarily of the most effective types, both for ourselves and for England. Great emphasis has been placed on plane production. The President, 15 months ago, called for 50,000 planes. Now that we find we are producing only 700 combat planes a month, is it not ominous that this production declined in July as compared to the two preceding months? It is significant to me, too, that in July, 1941, the production of combat planes is only 200 more than in January. This decline in the production of military planes, both training and combat, during the month of July should be a warning, and it is generally descriptive of the lagging of our entire program.

For the year ending September 1, 1941, the total production of combat planes for ourselves and England will be less than 500 per month, as compared to production in Germany, estimated by competent authorities to be from two to three thousand per month.

Certainly drastic steps must be taken to remedy this condition. In the production of other vital equipment, similar delay has occurred. The first M-M 5 howitzer was produced on May 7, last, and only about 100 will be produced this calendar year. 37 M-M antitank guns will be produced only at the rate of 15 a month. Only 15 of the 80-MM mortars will be produced in the immediate months ahead. Not a single 155 M-M gun will be produced in 1941.

We must remember, too, that the figures on plane production and tank production do not include guns and other equipment, and no doubt further delay will occur in equipping these fighting machines with the necessary tools.

In all figures and estimates I have given the combined production for the United States and Britain is used.

The Honorable Robert P. Patterson, Undersecretary of War, for whom I have a high regard, in a broadcast on Saturday, August 16, stated:

"Those who are paying the bill for arming the United States have a right to know how their money is being spent and what it is buying. Their Government welcomes programs on the radio and comment in the press, no matter how critical they are sometimes. The more of them the better. They are a sign that this democracy is full of life and abounding with health. If they ever stopped, we would begin to worry."

With this statement by Mr. Patterson I thoroughly agree. But when the production of equipment is given in percentages of previous production, as Mr. Patterson did in the same speech, the impressions are likely to be misleading to the public. In this speech, Mr. Patterson said the production of tanks was 800 per cent more than last December. This may be true, as the production of modern, effective tanks in December was nil, and a production of eight now would be 800 per cent more. Of antiaircraft guns, Mr. Patterson said in this speech that the production is 400 per cent more than in December. The facts are that not a single modern antiaircraft gun was produced in December, and this statement is accurate, to the extent that if four are produced now, the increase would be 400 per cent.

Why not tell the people of America the actual facts? The sooner they know and understand the lack of our preparedness and the lagging of the entire program, the quicker the average citizen will respond to make the sacrifices necessary to speed up this program and to do his or her part in the preparedness effort.

The boys in the camps being trained as soldiers have not the essential military equipment. In fact, there is not a single camp today anywhere in this country which has adequate military equipment for training purposes, and this delays the training of boys who are sacrificing for their country.

What should be done?

Suggests Reorganization

Many things will have to be done. The entire system of our defense production must be fundamentally reorganized along sound lines of business efficiency and the avoidance of conflicting authority, the chief bane of any great governmental effort. It is certainly obvious that the first and most important thing to do is to eliminate the conflicting authority that now exists between the different officials and the different agencies at Washington. Anyone observing the situation first hand here at Washington must be greatly alarmed at the great delay occasioned by the very apparent inability of our different governmental agencies to function in coordination and cooperation to produce these materials without unreasonable delay. There must be one head of our defense program and this head should have the power and authority to give orders and enforce his decisions. This is the first step, and in my judgment, nothing of a constructive character can be done until this head is appointed, our defense program unified and the total lack of coordination which now exists corrected.

That there has been very inadequate planning in past months, of course, is obvious now. This is the cause for the failure to place orders earlier for essential equipment which requires from a year to 18 months to produce. Whatever may have been the excuses for this lack of planning in the past, it should not prevail in the future.

Then, too, there has been too much business as usual. In this day of national peril, non-defense needs must yield to the necessities of defense. If we are to have all-out preparedness, we must have an all-out effort, and an all-out sacrifice on the part of our citizens. This is necessary if we hope to keep out of the war or if we hope to protect ourselves. Only an aroused public opinion and full publicity will, in my judgment, compel a business-like administration of this colossal task to which we have set our hands, namely, the total arming of our country and giving aid to England.

Social gains, as everything else, must yield to the necessity of our supreme effort for national defense and aid to England. All defense plants in America should at once be placed upon a full week working basis. The President has the power, under the emergency authority granted him, to suspend during the emergency the 40-hour week. Proper provision can be made for over-time work on this basis, but we cannot prepare ourselves effectively by working on a 40-hour week standard. Even though some plants are now working on longer hours, suspension of the 40-hour week should be uniform on all defense contracts and continue for the duration of the emergency.

The people of America are for all-out defense, Congress is for all-out defense. It is now up to the executive branch of the Government to produce the materials and equipment for this all-out defense. What we must have and have quickly are the completed tanks, the guns, the combat planes, and the ships.

(Editor's Note: The United States' decision to arm against aggression and to aid Great Britain against the Axis powers was destined to shift the currents of American life. Here is the first of a series by Don Whitehead, of The Washington Post Special News Service telling the story of what is happening to the American way of life.)

NEW YORK, Aug. 19 (The Special News Service).—As swiftly as a potter molds the clay with which he works, the disruptions of the European war and this Nation's gigantic defense effort are reshaping the lives and habits of everyone in the United States.

There is the inevitability of death and taxes in the influences loosed by the gods of war. The average man can no more dodge them than he can shift the tides of the sea.

Whether it is in a Park Avenue penthouse above the glittering city lights or in an isolated cabin in the brooding loneliness of the hills, the shadow of war has fallen.

It is becoming apparent in revised standards of living, in work and play, in industrial upheavals from coast to coast, in shifts of population, in what we eat, wear, hear, read, see and think.

Housewives, debutantes and working girls are learning to do men's work so that if war comes they can take over jobs as mechanics, ambulance and truck drivers, airplane ferry pilots and clerks.

Cities are blacked out in training against the day when enemy bombers might unload cargoes of death from the skies. Citizens volunteer for air-raid duty and learn the tricks of defending themselves and their cities.

BILLIONS of dollars are pouring into industry to speed production of implements of war. Wages are rising. Current national income is about 11 per cent above last year. Wholesale and retail prices are rising. "High cost of living" again is a common phrase.

Like a giant awakening from a long sleep, the Nation has shaken off the torpor of depression and plunged headlong into preparations for defense.

Smoke pours from factory chimneys which a few years ago were lifeless skeletons. The lines of unemployed have shrunk as the "forgotten man" packs a dinner pail to go to his job in a defense plant. Villages mushroom into boom towns with construction of new industries. Armies pitch their camps in once quiet meadows and the rumble of mechanized equipment is heard along the highways.

Someone must pay the piper—and that someone is everyone. Taxes are rising, with the income revenues reaching farther down the line of the little fellow. Greater chunks are taken out of the big incomes.

Many may become weary of the clamor of war and defense and try to shut their eyes and ears to the strange new discords while yearning for the "good old days" of peace and restfulness. But they cannot escape the forces at work.

LIVING costs, fairly steady during the first months of the defense program, have edged steadily upward recently, and are eating a larger slice of the wage earner's pay check.

The National Industrial Conference Board's report for June shows living costs 23.4 per cent above the level of June, 1933. The June costs were 1.3 per cent higher than the preceding month.

Food prices are at the highest level since 1929 and 39.9 per cent greater than the depression low point of March, 1933. Wholesale commodities likewise are at the highest peak since 1929. Rents average 40.7 per cent above the rent level of January, 1934, and clothing prices are 21.3 per cent higher than in April and May, 1933. Sundries cost 9.3 more than in 1933.

Few of us can comprehend money in terms of billions. We leave the graphs and charts for the statisticians. But the housewives know what it means when the prices of sugar, beef, wheat, corn, shirts, dresses, shoes, furniture and rent begin edging upward. So does the farmer, the mechanic, the truck driver, the clerk and stenographer.

That's when the budget must be revised, a few dollars saved in one place to pay for increased costs in another.

The retail markets reflect consumers' fears of shortages and spiraling prices in the future. Each shortage scare causes a flurry of buying in clothing, household goods and durable goods. Meanwhile, the Government is trying to control, by price regulation and restricted installment buying, the rising cost of living.

THE Nation saw a recent vivid example of buyer hysteria when the Government called a halt in the silk industry. Hosiery counters were swamped by the rush of women buyers. Reserve supplies which normally would have lasted three months were wiped out overnight.

An economist in a large New York department store says buyer hysteria has "jazzed up the whole retail situation." Much of the buying has resulted from increased national income, but a large part of it has been attributed to consumer fears.

"If the public would buy in normal quantities there would be no problem as to consumer goods," this economist said, adding that the factories were able to take care of normal demands even with defense orders.

He pointed to the fact that national defense demands have been largely in the capital goods field, which has no direct influence on consumer goods supplies.

Approximately 96 per cent of the Government defense contracts awarded from June 1, 1940, to March 31, 1941, were for ships, submarines, aircraft, ammunition plants, aviation facilities, cantonments, automobile equipment, ordnance, ammunition and other supplies, while only 4 per cent were for clothing and equipment.

VIRTUALLY every city, town and hamlet in the country, however, has seen the sudden spurt in trade resulting from the vast volume of Federal expenditures. Department store sales have shown increases up to 46 per cent over last year in such cities as Norfolk, Va., which has many defense industries.

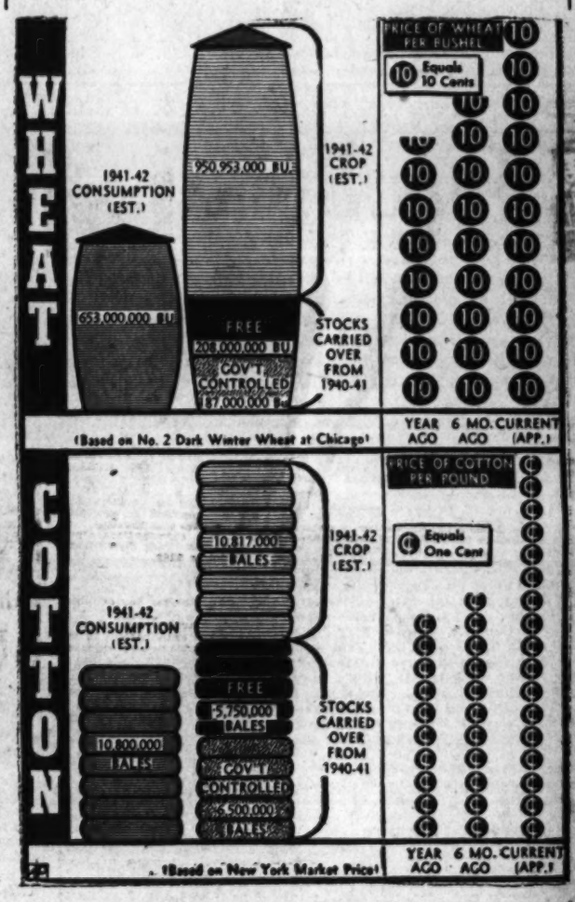
Department store sales throughout the country were approximately 13 per cent higher in the first six months this year than in a similar period last year. The dollar volume jumped from $32,671,000,000 to more than $36,890,000,000.

All these things are outward manifestations of the shifting currents in American life.

One day there will be peace. The guns will be silent and the economy geared for war and defense will shift to peacetime pursuits. America will return to normal.

But it will not be the America of today or of yesterday. It will be a new America, a changed America with new ideas, new tastes, new standards and new habits.

Commodities Pile Up, Prices Soar



The President's Day

By International News Service

REUNION: In honor of reunion with the boys he left behind to speculate during his two-week Churchill-climaxed yachting trip, the President talked at unusual length and with disarming frankness. On and off the record he answered queries goodnaturedly and in detail. The Roosevelt wit glinted frequently, and he even went so far as to write a lead for the boys after drawing a parallel between current indifference to the gravity of democracy's situation and Civil War wishful thinking. President quotes Lincoln and draws parallel, was F. D. R.'s suggestion.

GLOWING: Tanned and glowing, the President worked in his shirtsleeves yesterday, revealing that he has some new white shirts with soft collars, maroon and blue sleeve monograms. To keep his appointments from running overtime the Chief Executive has installed a large black alarm clock of the drugstore counter type, which reminds him of the limitations of 24 hours, from a vantage point of a nearby table.

NEVER GET TO HEAVEN: Saying that he was very much afraid he'd never get to Heaven because of his desecration of Potomac Park with the temporary Navy and Munition Buildings during the last war, the President said flatly that he was agin' the new War Department building project for Arlington, Va., because (a) it would mess up the view of Arlington Cemetery and spoil the Capital's beauty; (b) it would be too big anyway.

MIXED GRILL: The Presidential appointment sheet presented a fine mixed grill of statesmen, politicians and miscellaneous callers. Senator William E. Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, nabbed first place, got 15 minutes of the chief's time. As Smathers left, Senator W. Lee (Pass the Biscuits Pappy) O'Daniel (Democrat), of Texas, went in to be officially blessed. Publisher David Stern came next, followed 20 minutes later by Budgeter Harold D. Smith, who had things to say about the War Department building program, too, and none of them approving. At 1 p. m. Lord Beaverbrook bounced in, lunched with the President off the desk top, talked with him about the need for new surveys of both American and British production futures through 1943, ways and means of further speed, more effective cooperation.

STATE: Secretary of State Hull was added to the list of appointments at the President's request, came over at 3:40 p. m. to talk with him, and kept a bevy of correspondents waiting some 10 minutes while he wound up certain business with the boss.

That New Drama Season Really Is on the Move

Battle of London Now Set Up at National; Patriotic Shorts for New York Schools; Nutshell News and Notes of Amusements

IF THERE WAS ANY LINGERING DOUBT about it, it is all pretty thoroughly dispelled by now. About the opening of the National Theater for the new season next Monday night, that is. Almost anything can happen—and usually does—to a new season's first bookings until the avant couriers take up their march past the drama desk to bury it beneath gay pieces of literature and gaudy art concerning the theatrical wares they are vending. The procession started a week, or ten days, or a fortnight ago and has been passing the reviewing stand ever since. Dick Maney, Bill Doll and Karl Bernstein are hardly out of sight around the corner.

ED WYNN

The Meticulous Maney, of course, is crashing his cymbals in behalf of Edgar Selwyn's production of Frederick Hazlitt Brennan's "The Wookey," starring Edmund Gwenn in the title role, first of the 1941 entries to get away from the wire on E Street, August 25. Scenery and sound apparatus for "The Wookey" were moved into the theater last Saturday and today the author, producer, director and cast will arrive in town to resume rehearsals tomorrow and continue them through Monday.

Mr. Doll is assuring the anxious that Brock Pemberton will have a very superior "shudder-comedy" on the same boards the week of September 1, in Parker Fennelly's "Two Story House." Something to do with what a thrill-author wrote in the house in question on a pretty terrible night and what actually happened, one gathers.

Mr. Bernstein is gamboling on the "Village Green," which has more to do with Baltimore than Washington, since the play opens in the Maryland Theater in the Monumental City the same night "The Wookey" opens here. It affords Frank Craven opportunity to revert to his genial vein of paternal comedy, which should be enough to engage the distant attention of Capital playgoers.

On top of all that, the adjectival veteran, Al Spink, writes from New York that he is practically on his way to the tesselated elegance of the drayma department this very minute to convey personal assurances that Ed Wynn, in "Boys and Girls Together," still is "the perfect fool," as Washingtonians will find out the week of September 8. And still another bulletin says that Alan Dinehart is closing the 612-performance run of "Separate Rooms," in New York, on September 6 and will begin a road tour the following week. That means the National on September 15. Everything accounted for but the fluke—which seems to be nonexistent this year.

Curriculum Augmented by the Cinema

At the request of the New York City school authorities, the Warner Brothers Technicolor National Defense and historical short subjects will virtually be included in the curriculum of Manhattan's public schools. In accordance with schedules supplied by the educational authorities, the shorts will be booked for showing on specified days at theaters in the vicinity of the various schools. Pupils will be marched to the given theater in a body and next day submit reports on the pictures and essays on topics suggested by them, as expanded by talks by faculty members. Having seen practically all of them, Washington already knows the value of these releases at just this time.

And still they come . . . "Poison Pen," an English mystery-thriller, with Flora Robson and Robert Newton heading the cast, will be shown at Sidney Lust's Bethesda Theater for three days, beginning Sunday . . . Said to be as gripping as Robert Montgomery's "Night Must Fall"—which is plenty . . . And speaking of Mr. Montgomery, "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," his last picture before taking up his official duties abroad, is being previewed by the guys and gals of the press today, against its opening at the Earle on Friday . . . They say it is made up of rare ingredients, with Claude Rains, James Gleason, John Emery, Rita Johnson and numerous others in there to help do the mixing . . . Glen Echo Park is rounding out one of its most successful seasons . . . Maestro Paul Kain reports largest attendance at the Spanish Garden Ballroom was one Saturday night in July when more than 5,000 jitterbugs did their jittering . . . Average Saturday nights, 3,000; week nights, with a decent break in the weather, 2,000 . . . Boyd Hickman says largest day in the Crystal Pool also was back in July, with more than 4,000 waterbugs splashing about . . . It has gone that way all the way down the line of the 50-odd amusements . . . . So what is Glen Echo kicking about? . . . It isn't!

Ann's Soft Answer!

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 19.—"What do you want to be when you grow up?"

Is there a soul on earth who hasn't been asked that question as a child? A group of grinning grownups standing around in a ring while you squirm for an answer? Little 8-year-old Ann Todd, who will play in "Benjamin Blake," is the latest victim, but she set them right back on their heels.

CHARLES BOYER

"I'd like," said Ann, "to be a combination of all the actresses I've played as children. And that means Dorothy Lamour, Linda Darnell, Loretta Young and Ann Sheridan." Next she'll do Alice Faye, so it looks as though she's got something there!

Ran into Charles Boyer all dolled up in formal black velvet smoking jacket in "Appointment for Love." Says Charles, "The story's got to be mighty good to get me before the camera in another picture this year." . . . The Arthur Hornblows are still mortified over the fact that they took canned goods to Jasper National Park, in Canada, and when they arrived there, found a perfectly equipped inn.

When Wendy Barrie did a personal in Chicago, a young fan broke into her dressing room, and explained that Wendy was her favorite actress, so Wendy said, "If you ever come to Hollywood, look me up." She did and brought her mother with her, and now Wendy's had to show her the town.

Louis B. Mayer took some visitors to the "Panama Hattie" set, and asked little Jackie Horner to entertain them. Jackie said, "I will if you'll help me. Just hold me on your lap while I play and sing." And Louis was hooked.

If Phyllis Brook isn't careful, she'll end up having to wear a wig in real life. For the past year she's had her hair a nice shade of brown. They wanted it a bright red for "Shanghai Gesture," she dyed it, they didn't like it. Now she's so blond she can't tell where the hair ends and the forehead begins . . . Don Woods had the right idea when he went to do summer stock at Elitch's Gardens. There hasn't been a vacant seat in the house since he opened there in June.

Ann Baxter raised heck over being shot in a hog pen for "Swamp Water," so they finally substituted baby pigs. They were so cute Annie climbed in without a murmur.

'The Wookey' Opens National, Topping The Incoming Week

"THE WOOKEY." The National Theater's season opens Monday evening with this new play about a Cockney family and the Battle of London, by magazine writer Frederick Hazlitt Brennan. Under the banner of Edgar Selwyn, it is the producer's first offering since "Strike Up the Band" of 11 years ago and comes to the National just prior to its opening as one of New York's first plays of the new season. Horace Wookey, reverentially known as "The Wookey," and his family are cocky tugboat owners of the Thames. Edmund Gwenn has the title role; his supporting cast includes Carol Goodner, Heather Angel, Norah Howard, Horace McNally, Victor Beecroft, Sean Dillon, Olive Reeves-Smith and Henry Mowbray. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

The stage revue includes Jay and Lou Seiler, Yola Galli, Ray and Arthur and the versatile Roxyettes. Opens Friday morning.

Opens tomorrow morning.

Metropolitan

There's also dancing in the Spanish Garden from 9 to midnight week nights.

'The Old Soak' Is Revived at Cross Roads

By Richard L. Coe

Reviewing a barn theater's production of "The Old Soak" on a rainy night with Arch McDonald in the leading role after announcing a 12-inning baseball game (which the Nats won!) is fraught with so many possibilities for the brilliant, sweepingly clever lead sentence, that we're not gonna even try. Jennie made her mind up and so may you.

Yes sir, folks, Arch is back at the Cross Roads Theater playing the Don Marquis character he broke his ankle to perform three years ago and ultimately acted to such wild acclaim. Last night's was the opener of a two-week revival for "The Old Soak" at the Virginia barn theater and despite the appropriately wet reception, there weren't many vacant chairs in the hayloft.

Actually "The Old Soak" is a period piece. Don Marquis adapted it from his own novel in 1922 and looking back on it now makes it seem like the "Ten Nights in a Barroom" of the Prohibition Era. Wally Beery has played it on the screen and other variations on the theme have made its outline as familiar as a slow wink if not so pleasing to take. Jokes about home brew and the machinations of the Eighteenth Amendment are mercifully musty in this day of other evils.

Arch is superb as "The Old Soak" and once the baseball boys give him less to shout about of an afternoon on the radio, he'll probably be rolling on in an even more carefree, louder fashion.

Somehow, though, the boys and girls of the cast put all the dignity of a Greek tragedy into their supporting roles, which, considering that "The Old Soak," whatever else it might be, is not a Greek tragedy, is a lavish waste of restraint. For a clew to audience reaction, note the sound of hisses the villainous banker got and act accordingly. If the vitality of the piece is gone, smack it back to life with some snappier playing. Not even the George Abbott graduates would make many fireworks of such similar situations if they played 'em straight. Life is grim, life is earnest and all that, but in slow motion it's also dull.

You couldn't very well accuse Ruth May of letting things droop last night, though. She played the bottle-conscious maid and, except for a not very convincing red nose, she was amusingly comic and got a lot of laughs out of the role. Fred Draper acted the rustic brewer, unemployed bartender. Allen Andrews, the Tyrone Power of the local cornfields, played the poor girl's wealthy boy friend with a nice light touch, and Edith Simmons was his perplexed gal friend, daughter to "The Old Soak." Neal Frizell had the tough role of the banker-cousin; Ann Cloward was the sorely tried wife, and Francis X. Nolan played the frenzied money-mad son. Suzanne Carrier acted the tough gal of unpleasant background.

Howard Wentworth directed this finale of the Cross Roads season as he has all the other productions at Bailey's this summer, performing his accustomed workmanlike job on a piece that's thoroughly dated.

But anyway, Arch McDonald is the reason they revived "The Old Soak," and no cracks intended.

THE ANSWER TO THE CHISOX'S SUCCESS

Cleveland, Aug. 19.—There isn't much doubt now wherein lies the genius of the Chicago White Sox, who were supposed to be tagging along somewhere in the second division and are now a hot second-place club. The two gentlemen in charge, Manager Jimmy Dykes and Coach Muddy Ruel, practice some sort of mesmerism with their pitchers.

POVICH

It's a fast sort of combination, Dykes-to-Ruel. Dykes grabs the pitchers off the scrap heap in shrewd trades with other clubs, and turns 'em over to Ruel, who refurbishes their pitching motion, spills sweet encouragement into their ears, imparts a few niceties of the pitching art, and turns them back to Dykes as winners.

Honest, that's the way it goes. Dykes says so himself. "Our pitching?" asks Dykes. "There's the best pitching asset on our club," and he points to Ruel, who was a catcher all his life. Modestly Dykes waives the credit for the phenomenal work of the White Sox staff. "Ruel knows more about pitching than I do, he says. Consult my old batting average if you want the evidence. Why should I fool around with my pitchers when I've got the best pitching coach in baseball."

The latest evidence of what the Messrs. Dykes and Ruel do with pitching was on the scoreboard this afternoon. The White Sox were playing the Philadelphia Athletics, one of the better hitting clubs in the league, in a double-header. And the A's didn't get a run all day. Thornton Lee shut 'em out in the first game, and a lad named Johnny Humphries pitched a four-hit shutout for Dykes and Ruel in the second game.

Humphries Is Noteworthy Example

The case of young Mr. Humphries is especially noteworthy in any dissertation on the magic that Dykes and Ruel practice with discarded and otherwise inept pitchers who fall into their hands. Dykes hornswoggled the lad away from the Cleveland Indians last winter. Dykes, it developed, stole him. He talked the Indians out of Humphries in exchange for Clint Brown, who admits to a baseball age of 37. It was an even up swap despite the fact that Humphries is a 25-year-old youth and Brown's arm has been under the surgeon's knife off and on for years.

Today wasn't the first shut-out pitched by Humphries for the White Sox. It was the second shut-out he pitched for Dykes, perhaps because he had been started only two times. Apparently they didn't start him until he was ready. That was only last week, when he was sent to the mound and shut out the Detroit Tigers with seven hits. Meantime, Ruel had him on the bench in the bullpen, talking about pitching, pointing out the styles of the good pitchers and nursing the lad along until you see what happened.

With the Indians, Humphries had been a great prospect at the beginning. Owner of a fast ball, he was something of a Cleveland hero with his relief pitching three years ago. Last season, when he didn't get off to a good start as a starting pitcher, he was discouraged. Oscar Vitt didn't help him any with caustic comment at his failures. Dykes and Ruel, meanwhile, had been watching and coveting him. They wondered what some honeyed word and some expert instruction might do for the lad, and at the first chance they grabbed him, for virtually nothing.

They Do Wonders With Bric-a-Brac

By this means Dykes and Ruel have been putting together the leagues best pitching stag. Dykes has been claiming old bric-a-brac around the league with such success that there isn't much doubt that he's the cleverest David Harum of baseball. His pitching staff cost the White Sox virtually nothing.

The only pitcher Dykes inherited from Manager Lou Fonseca when he took over the White Sox job in 1934 was Ted Lyons. The only pitcher who came to him via the skimpy White Sox farm system is Johnny Rigney. And Rigney was no hot shot when he reported. Not until Ruel labored long and carefully with him did he emerge as one of the better righthanders of the league.

Dykes claimed Bill Dietrich from the Washington Club a few years ago, and eyebrows were immediately raised to the scalps amid snickers. Only 10 days before Connie Mack had let Dietrich go to Washington for the waiver price, and after one look at him the Nats willingly sold him to Chicago and were thankful, at the time, to ge their money back. One of Dietrich's first acts after joining up with Dykes and Ruel was to pitch a pretty good sort of no-hit game.

Dykes and Ruel picked up Ed Smith when as astute a gentleman as Connie Mack gave up on him, and Smith for two years has been one of the better lefthanders of the league. A few years before, Dykes whipped up a three-cornered deal that sent Earl Whitehill to Cleveland and Jack Salveson to Washington. Dykes got Thornton Lee out of the trade. The Indians had quit on him, but Lee responded to the ministrations of Ruel, and today he's a swell pitcher.

Davis Wins Opener With 5-Hit Hurling; Drake Takes Battle Of Rookies in 2d

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Aug. 19.—The always surprising Brooklyn Dodgers broke open their powder keg twice today for two big innings and blasted the Pittsburgh Pirates fore and aft in a double-header, 9 to 0 and 6 to 2, to expand their National League lead to two full games.

Rain kept all other teams in the league, including the second-place St. Louis Cardinals, out of action. Showers fell here this morning and a constant drizzle during the second game turned Ebbets Field into a slippery quagmire, but the umpires kept the foes at enforced labor and the Dodgers profited.

Brooklyn blew open the first game with seven runs in the first inning and then won the nightcap with a five-run eighth-inning rally climaxed by Dolph Camilli's twenty-fifth home run of the season with two on.

Davis' Fourth Shutout

Lanky Curt Davis hurled five-hit ball for his fourth shutout of the year in the opening encounter and never let the Buccaneers out of his iron grasp.

Joe Sullivan started on the mound for Pittsburgh and because injuries have reduced the Pirate pitching staff to seven men, Manager Frank Frisch tried to let him weather the storm. He faced 10 men, gave up five hits, two walks and seven runs while getting only two batters out.

Finally Joe Dietz was called in and subdued the Dodgers. They made nine hits after that, but Joe Medwick's triple in the fourth was the only one that hurt. It drove in a run and he himself tallied later.

The second game for seven innings was a tight hurling battle between Rookie Tom Drake, just up from Nashville, and Lefty Ken Heintzelman.

Walk Helped Out

The Dodgers made a run in the first when Dixie Walker drew a pass, raced to third on a hit-and-run single by Billy Herman, and came home on Pete Reiser's force out.

By this time the rain was falling steadily and the Pirates began stalling hopefully. Their tactics soon brought about Manager Frisch's banishment from the game and, although the umpires held repeated

Star Outfielder Sprains Ankle; Out Several Days; Each Winner Gets 16 Hits

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 19.—The New York Yankees came to grief today, not so much by dividing a double-header with the Detroit Tigers, as in losing their great batting and fielding star, Joe DiMaggio, with a sprained ankle.

The Tigers scored eight runs in an unrestrained second inning in the first game to win, 12 to 3, and then were knocked back into their humble place as the Yanks captured the nightcap, 8 to 3.

No bones were believed broken, but he was taken to Harper Hospital for X-rays and will be out of the line-up for several days. Until today he had played every inning of every game this year, but his fragile legs preserved his unwanted record of never yet having played a full schedule for the Yankees.

In the first game Lefty Hal Newhouser kept the bombers well muffled on five hits. One of them was Charley Keller's thirtieth home run in the second inning and the other was Phil Rizzuto's single with the bases loaded in the third.

But the big Detroit explosion in the second, which included eight hits and sent Marvin Breuer fleeing, settled the game beyond debate. The uprising included a single by Billy Sullivan with the bases loaded, a double by Frank Croucher with the sacks filled, and a two-run double by Charley Gehringer as

Kennedy Turns in Superb Relief Job As Mates Register Third Straight

By Shirley Povich

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Aug. 19.—Stand up and cheer, you citizens of Apalachicola, Fla., because one of your boys did a powerful deed today. Jimmy Bloodworth sent a home run climbing over Cleveland's right field fence in the twelfth inning this afternoon and lifted the Nats to a startling 8-6 victory over the Indians. It was the Nats' third straight victory.

Yep, they beat the Indians again, partly for old times' sake and partly to keep out of the league cellar. They did it the hard way, stirring up the tying run against big Al Milnar with two out in the ninth. They were never in the lead until Bloodworth's homer disappeared into Lexington Avenue. Mickey Vernon was on base. It was the fading Indians' sixth straight defeat.

You may have your choice of Washington heroes today, in fact. There was, of course, Bloodworth, who was breaking up the ball game with his fourth hit of the afternoon; or there was Vernon Kennedy, who did a superlative relief pitching job of it for Bucky Harris in the last four important innings; or there was George Case or Buddy Lewis, who got that crucial tying run home in the ninth.

Nats Outslug Indians

In fact, the Nats generally were slightly terrific. They outhit the Indians, 17 to 10, and they weren't trifling much with singles. They banged out eight two-baggers during the afternoon, honest, in an amazing display of power, but four Cleveland double plays cut 'em down in the early innings.

Maybe we'd better tell you how the Nats saved the game before they won it. Going into that ninth, Milnar had a 6-5 lead, after relieving Chubby Dean in the seventh inning. And when Pinch Hitter Johnny Welaj grounded to shortstop for the first out the customers were very happy. But George Case roused 'em out of their complacency with the Nats' eighth two-bagger of the day—a solid swat far against the right center fence, and the tying run was on base.

Roger Cramer eased the tension for the Indians a bit when he flied to Walker for the second out, but Buddy Lewis was hanging around for just such an emergency and he swatted a 3-and-3 pitch into left field and Case was home with the run that made it 6-6.

Kennedy in Rare Form

Kennedy, who had been complaining of a sore arm for the past two weeks, was rather magnificent while keeping the Nats in the ball game. Bill Zuber succeeded Ken Chase at the end of five innings. Zuber gave up two runs to the Indians in the sixth. Chase left the game with a blistered finger, and Kennedy inherited a 6-5 deficit, caused mostly by Jeff Heath's three-run homer in the opening inning.

In the last four innings, Kennedy pitched superlatively one-hit ball in holding the Indians runless. He hung in there grimly in the ninth when the Indians threatened to make away with the ball game after the Nats had tied it up.

The Indians had men on first and second and none out in the ninth when Peters drew a walk and Campbell singled to short left, but from that point Kennedy was boss. He grabbed an attempted sacrifice bunt by Gerald Walker and slung

'Pounds' Discovers Sammy Baugh

Los Angeles, Calif.

Dear Boss,

I knew I wouldn't be long catching on to this football racket. I've been keeping my eyes and ears opened on this trip. You know, Boss, going to bed late, getting up early and sleeping fast. And it's paying dividends. Today I discovered that the big star of the Redskins is a guy named Sammy Baugh. I thought all along that I had heard the name some place.

Well, we were having a little poker game and, with the aid of that little slab of mirror between the Pullman seats, I wasn't doing so bad either. Baugh passed—and I opened it with a pair of queens. Bob Masterson, the big end, sitting at my left, caught me taking a sneak preview of his eights and deuces so I had to say something.

HAIGHT

"Who is the long drink of water sitting over there with the beat-up jacket and the cowboy boots?" I whispered.

"That's the best passer in the business," replied Bob.

Later in the afternoon Baugh tried to pass the buck. Now don't get me wrong, Boss. I haven't tried to borrow a dollar from him—not yet. After all, I have only been on the same train with him for a few hours.

It was this way. I was sitting there looking out the window at the passing California desert, convinced that Mother Nature must have had a hangover when she whipped up that conglomeration of rocks, sand and sage brush. I looked across the car and there sat Baugh. So I decided to interview him.

I moved over beside him and asked, "Mr. Baugh, who do you like in the third at Cumberland?" Well, Boss, I couldn't blame him when he looked at me as if I was crazy. But you can't blame me for getting my sports mixed. I'm getting on in years now and my gears ain't shifting easily.

OFF ON GRID TACK

Well, we finally got down to football. I found this Baugh guy as plain as an old shoe, although he would rather wear those cowboy boots. I decided not to dilly-dally with this interview. My next shot was, "When are you going to retire?" He didn't make a pass at me, so I patted the good luck beads I had bought from that Indian woman at Clovis, N. Mex.

Baugh did answer my question, however. He said that he would be playing football as long as the team wanted him and he was earning his money. "—But," went on Sammy. "See that Wil-

Kenosha, Wis., Aug. 19.—The Chicago Bears, national pro football league champs, defeated the Kenosha Cardinals, strong independent professional eleven, 27 to 6 tonight in the Bears' only public appearance before they meet the college All-stars at Soldier Field, Chicago, August 28.

The coaches of the college All-stars were in the crowd of 6,200 who saw the exhibition at Lake Front Stadium.

It took the Bears 22 minutes to manufacture their first touchdown. After the rookies had been replaced by the champions' big guns, Ray Nolting crashed through center for 65 yards to put the ball in position for Bill Osmanski to power over. Artoe kicked the extra point.

Shortly after this Sid Luckman passed to Ken Kavanaugh for 45 yards and another touchdown. Artoe again connected.

The Bears counted twice more in the second half. Bussey passing 17 yards to Don Seigal and Bobby Swisher running 44 yards. Plasman kicked the last extra point.

Two Blocking Backs Impress Ray Flaherty

By Walter Haight

Post Staff Writer

San Diego, Calif., Aug. 19.—A couple of thick-necked blocking backs made Coach Ray Flaherty smile this afternoon as the Redskins went through their second day of training at nearby Pacific Beach. Jack Guthrie, from St. Mary's of California, and Ken Dow, from Oregon State, gave all indications of making the pro league grade. Of almost identical build, Guthrie and Dow packed a lot of speed and are being counted upon for heavy work in the backfield when scrimmage begins on Saturday.

Coach Flaherty also appeared to have put the stamp of approval on Fred Davis, All-Southern tackle from Alabama, when he assigned the 22-year-old giant the jersey No. 17. This was Turk Edwards' number of nine years of pro football. Edwards, now line coach, sat on a trunk and watched. "I'm glad to see the kid get my number. He looks like he's going to keep it for a while, too," he said.

The usual blisters and sore muscles that can be expected on the second day of training irked only two players. Veteran Wayne Millner complained of a kink in the back and took things easy after the exercising, while Rookie Ed Cifers, the big end from Alabama, pulled a muscle in his groin and was excused.

The battle for the end positions continues. Flaherty came up with some praise after the drill for Sam Goldman, heretofore rated an outsider in the struggle for the six jobs.

Sessions of passing and kicking as well as dummy scrimmage marked the workout. Three backfield combinations were used. One included Lee Gentry, Roy Zimmerman, Ray Hare and Bob Seymour with Bob Hoffman alternating. Other was composed of Frank Filchock, Wilbur Moore, Dick Todd and Jack Guthrie with Cecil Hare fitting in at times. The third found Sammy Baugh, Ed Justice, Ken Dow and Andy Farkas in action with Edward Tornell coming in for some work with this group.

The Redskins have been training thus far in shorts but we haven't heard a "yoo-hoo."

Marital Battle Over, Louis, Wife Plan Second Honeymoon

By International News Service

Chicago, Aug. 19.—All was serene at 4055 South Michigan Boulevard tonight.

Their marital battle over, the Joe Louises planned to embark on a second honeymoon tomorrow.

"We'll spend the weekend together in New York," said the heavyweight champion, a wisp of a smile on his usual deadpan face, "and then I have to go into training for my fight with Lou Nova September 19."

Marva, who initiated the divorce action, beamed at her famous husband and at the cameras, and said:

"I've always wanted to go back with Joe."

Their marital difficulties ended today with a hug and a kiss duly recorded by newspaper photographers, after a conference in the chambers of Master in Chancery Dwight S. Bobb.

Divorce Suit Halted

The reconciliation halted hearings on Marva's divorce bill and alimony demands, and Joe's answer which charged his wife with extravagance which had impoverished him.

When the couple appeared before Master Bobb today to continue the hearing on the bill, William H. Temple, Joe's attorney, announced he had something to say, and said:

"Mr. Barrow (Louis' real name) has instructed me to inform the court that he is willing to be reconciled with Mrs. Barrow."

Whereupon B. C. Cyrus, Marva's attorney, addressed the master, and less formally added:

"Joe and Marva talked things over last night, and I understand they reached this agreement: That the alimony petition be continued for a month, at which time either Joe will make a settlement with her, or they will go back to live together."

But Temple didn't understand it

Des Moines Craft Wins at Grand Lake

Grand Lake, Colo., Aug. 19 (AP).—George Peak, of Des Moines, steered his craft through squalls today to a third straight victory in the five-race competition for the Sir Thomas Lipton Yacht Racing Trophy at the Grand Lake regatta.

Two boats were capsized and several dipped their sails in the high waves. No boat was damaged, however, and no one was injured.

Worsham Duo Takes Pro-Am; Mrs. Jani Wins at Chevy Chase

Malone Ties With Nolan For Sweeps

Wiffy Cox Shoots Day's Best Round, A 70; Low Amateur Won by Licklider

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Lewis Worsham, Jr., the 22-year-old Burning Tree pro who is prepping in earnest for next week's Hershey Open won his second pro-amateur tournament in as many days yesterday as he and Maury Fitzgerald had a best ball of 67 at Congressional in a Maryland State event.

Worsham, who with Ralph Bogart won the biggest Lancaster, Pa., event ever held on Monday, matched par 72 figures through a downpour in a round that included four birdies, making ten in two rounds for the Baltimore Open Champion.

The day's best round was a 70 by host pro Wiffy Cox, who, with the benefit of only one sizeable putt, a 15 footer on the 4th hole, dropped 16 pars and birdies for his two-under par score.

Nolan, Malone Tie

M. Parker Nolan, the host club champion, and Charley Malone, the big hitter from Indian Spring, tied for low gross in the amateur sweepstakes play with identical rounds of 38, 37—75. Nolan played 16 of the holes in one under par but had double bogey sixes on the seventh and sixteenth holes.

Low winner in the simon-pure division was a newcomer to local tournament play from Front Royal, Va., Preston Licklider, who posted an 82, 14—68. J. A. Woodside, of Beaver Dam, was next with a 79, 9—70.

Three teams tied with best ball 63s for second prize in the pro-amateur play, including Worsham with his second partner, Ralph Bogart. The pro holed a 40-foot putt for a birdie three on the eighteenth hole to get his partners in the money. Fitzgerald dropped a 6-footer himself, just in case Worsham missed.

Small Field Competes

The other tying teams were Cox and Nolan and Eddie Morgan and Licklider, both of Front Royal.

A comparatively small field competed as most of the boys took time off for the Lancaster event on Monday, one of the richest pro-amateur tournaments of the season. Only eight pros entered the sweepstakes and only two were par or better, Al Houghton trailing with a 75.

Worsham has now won two pro-amateurs and a pro sweepstakes in three of his last four tournament appearances and the young professional may have his game groomed to a point where he will be a threat in the $5000 Open at Hershey next week, Thursday through Sunday. At least a dozen local pros and amateurs will make the trip.

Fitzgerald came through with two birdies on the par five holes, and with a handicap stroke allowance on each, netted eagles.

Caddies Strike And Force Tycoons To Carry Clubs

By the Associated Press

Bar Harbor, Me., Aug. 19.—Edsel Ford, the automobile manufacturer, and Eugene Stetson, president of New York's Guaranty Trust Co., were among Kebo Valley Club golfers who carried their own bags today when caddies went on a brief sit-down strike.

This exclusive resort's police chief, George Abbot, who successfully mediated, reported that the boys apparently were irked at reprimands for going out on the course in search of yesterday's lost balls instead of reporting for morning roll-call.

Playing With 'Blocks' at Post's Grid School

Heavens Open Above Eastern Stadium But Pupils Insist on Staying Outside

Coach Sam Fox decided to move The Washington Post football school indoors yesterday when rain came down in sheets at Eastern High stadium, but he reckoned without his charges. To a man they insisted on staying outside, come anything short of snow.

The second class of The Post school, therefore, was undergone by a huge band of earnest young gridmen in weather more fitting for water polo than football. And as a result of his students' decision, Fox and his aides—Jim O'Leary and Les Ehrlich—announced that during the remainder of the two-week school classes will be run each day no matter what climatic conditions turn up.

Blocking lessons were the order of the day yesterday. Three types were explained, demonstrated, practiced and discussed before the two-hour session was over. A fourth—downfield blocking—was reserved for later.

Today the big item on the program, starting at 4 p. m., will be an appearance of Maurice ("Mush") Dubofsky, Georgetown University line coach, as a "guest" teacher. Dubofsky will give a short talk on various aspects of line play, along with demonstrations. He will be the only "guest" mentor on this week's schedule, the appearance of the other local grid standouts being postponed until next week.

All three regular coaches at The Post school have called their immense class "the most willing, hard-working and promising bunch of high school boys" they have ever seen. If they keep at it, you can expect to see a "well-conditioned" bunch of boys, to boot.

Posts a 94 To Capture First Prize

Marks First Time She Has Beat 100; Mrs. Hollander Is Second-Place Victor

Mrs. George M. Jani, who had never before broken the 100 mark in her golfing career, picked the District's hardest test for golf—Chevy Chase—to do it, and won the C. B. S. Cup play yesterday by a nine-stroke margin.

The Congressional Club player, who takes lessons from Warner Gray, took six strokes off the century mark with nines of 46 and 48 for a 94 and minus a 21-stroke handicap allotment won the trophy with shots to spare.

Mrs. Jani was the only player in the Class B starting field of 78 players to break 100, with gross honors thus going to Mrs. Milton Kladstein, Woodmont, with a pair of 50's for an even 100 score.

New Champion Thrilled

The new champion was so thrilled over her debut into the 90s that she could not even add her score when she finished the round. She was afraid it wasn't true. Her 94 included five three-putt greens but she more than made up for it with eight one-putters. Mrs. Jani's woods, however, were her best shots and accounted for her low score.

Second low net winner in the second annual tournament was Mrs. N. F. Hollander, Bannockburn, with the third lowest round of the day, 101, minus 19 handicap strokes for a net 82. The players were fortunate in finishing just before the afternoon storm which drove the presentation of prizes into the clubhouse.

The first eight prize winners represented as many different clubs, an extremely unusual occurrence for the women's tournaments. In third place was Mrs. J. E. Randels, Manor, with 110-27, 83, while Mrs. F. C. Williams, Argyle, with 104-20, 84, won fourth low net over Mrs. Ingman Harr, Washington, a former Washington Post Cup Class B champion, by the matching cards method. Mrs. Harr had 107-23, 84.

Mrs. Brantley Wins

Mrs. J. P. Brantley, Kenwood, also won by matching cards over Mrs. Earl Clary, Indian Spring, for sixth low net. They had respective scores of 110—25, 85, and 106—21, 85. Mrs. Frank Mirth, the Duffer's Cup champion from Indian Spring, was next with 106—20, 86.

Mrs. Jarrett White, the only player entered from the host club, was playing in her first tournament and just made the prize list with a score of 112—25, 87, despite a "horrible" 10 on the sixteenth. Mrs. Charles Chauncey, Kenwood, lost out in the draw with a 107—20, 87 total.

Chisox Down Macks Twice, 4-0 and 1-0

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 19.—The Chicago White Sox strengthened their hold on second place today by shutting out the Philadelphia Athletics twice, 4 to 0 and 1 to 0.

Thornton Lee and Johnny Humphries were the winning pitchers as the Chicagoans extended their streak to eight in a row and 17 victories in their last 20 decisions.

The A's Johnny Babich, although he held the Sox to five hits in the nightcap, was the victim of his own wildness. After a walk and sacrifice put a Chicago runner on second base in the third inning, Babich intentionally walked Joe Kuehl and then also passed Myril Hoag and Taft Wright to force Tom Turner across the plate with the only run of the game.

Humphries, making his third start of the season, turned in his second shutout in six days. He gave the Athletics only four hits.

Lee hung up his sixteenth victory, against eight defeats, by smothering the A's with six singles in the opener. Only one Philadelphian reached second and none passed that point. Lee's own double drove in Bob Kennedy, who had singled with the only run he needed in the third inning.

A pair of infield errors gave the Sox another run in the fourth and they added two more in the eighth on doubles by Julius Solters and Kennedy after Hoag singled.

Lee now has won more games than in any of his 13 previous seasons in professional baseball. Prior to today, the A's had beaten the White Sox 10 out of 16 times this season.

Schroeder Sure He and Kramer Will Keep U. S. Net Title

Lucky Omen In Form of Rain Is Back

Same Tournament Halted Year Ago And Pair Went on To Make History

By the United Press

Chestnut Hill, Mass., Aug. 19.—A year ago about this time rain forced postponement of semifinal matches in the National Doubles tennis championships.

Among those still in the competition was Frederick (Ted) Schroeder, jr., a cocky but worried 19-year-old Californian from Glendale who spent most of the off-day pacing the swank clubhouse at Longwood Cricket Club. Schroeder was concerned with how he and Jack Kramer, his partner of seven months, would do in their match with the experienced team of Don McNeill and Frank Parker, veterans of Davis Cup Play.

Young Schroeder shook off his "jitters" and with Kramer conquered the McNeil-Parker combination and went on to create tennis history by winning the national title in story-book style.

Rain came again to Longwood today to delay second-round matches in the sixtieth national championships, but the year's lapse has made quite a change in Schroeder.

Schroeder Gains Polish

The 1940 Schroeder was principally a brash kid whose belief in himself furnished sufficient inspiration to carry him and Kramer to victory. Actually his game was far short of his enthusiasm.

The impressive tag "coholder of the national doubles title" that began to appear after his name in sport stories gave Schroeder poise he previously lacked. Now he has the grace and sophistication of a big timer—but without conceit.

Schroeder brushed off a question as to whether he and Kramer would retain their doubles crown with a brief "We'll be in there fighting all the way."

Slouched comfortably in a clubhouse chair, the 155-pound former University of Southern California student seemed more anxious to discuss his singles games. Rated tenth nationally in the singles list last season, Schroeder has sprung several upsets this year. High spot to date was his conquest of National Champion McNeill at Seabright.

Wait Another Year

Lightning fast in covering court and possessor of a well-rounded game, his weakness has been inability to hit his peak and retain it.

"That comes with experience," Schroeder said. "I believe I'll have it in another year. Right now I play a good match and then an excellent match, but after that my game falls off. That's the difference between me and fellows like Bobby Riggs.

If it's just a matter of experience, "another year" should be more than enough for Ted to add the national singles title to his already imposing collection of doubles championships.

Deering won the 50-yard free style and was second in the 50-yard breast stroke. Gaylord was third in the first two events, won the 50-yard backstroke and was second in diving. Lipot finished second in the free style and backstroke.

Washington's Sports Slate Washed Clean

Yesterday's downpour may have been just what the farmers needed, but it put a definite crimp in local sports activity.

In the afternoon, the first game of the city-wide sandlot baseball tournament was called off. Involving the Heurich Brewers, defending titlists, and Veterans Administration, it was rescheduled for today at 4:30 on the East Ellipse.

The D. C. Recreation Department tennis tournament at Rock Creek Courts also was postponed until today. The same pairings as listed for yesterday will hold.

At night two sports events were called off. Midget automobile racing at West Lanham was postponed until next Tuesday, when the same set of drivers will participate. The second pair of games in the District of Columbia Softball Federation's tournament at Washington Softball Stadium was reset for tonight. Yellow Cab will tangle with Washington Boys Club at 8 p. m., and approximately one hour later Standard Linen takes on Westminster Church ten.

341 Shot Scores By 21 Lengths at Narragansett Park

By the Associated Press

Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 19.—The leader but was nosed out of the place as Jockey Ralph Eccard drove Karnak through on the inside. Ball Player, which turned in three unimpressive efforts at Rockingham, returned $69.70, $24.10 and $12.30. Karnak paid $19.90 and $10.70 for place and show and Taking Ways $5.00 for show.

Ball Player, making his first start during the current meeting, went postward as a 34—1 shot. He thrilled his few supporters by taking command from the Valdina Farm's imported Fairmond at the first turn and then pulling away with every stride.

Taking ways tried to follow the longest priced horse in the $1,300 Point Judith purse, the Tall Tree Stable's Ball Player, won with 21 longest priced horse in the $1300 Karnak today over the mile and 70 yards route at Narragansett Park.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 19.—"I sink spord is better more than one ambassador," sagely declared Francisco Borgonovo, dashing looking Argentinan today at his hotel, on the eve of his departure for Washington to see Cordell Hull and F. D. R. regarding next year's Pan American Olympics.

CONSIDINE

"Spord mixes," amplified the intense looking, black-haired millionaire who rowed for Argentina in the 1924 Olympics at Paris. He extended the fingers of both hands and interlocked them to symbolize how sport unites nations. "Conference, one or two men or twenty-five she speech all day, ac-compleesh nozzin. Spord mixes. Quick. Better than one ambassador. What have I said? I'll go to jail. With handcuffiets, what you call. Halp, Miss Spaventa!"

Miss Spaventa, emerged from one of the rooms adjacent to the handsome living room in which the distinguished young president of Buenos Aires' famed Hindu Club was being interviewed. She turned out to be (1) his interpreter, (2) good-looking, and (3) a senorita who slings the pure Castillian with a delightful Altoona accent, that being her home town. She got Borgonovo over a rough spot or two, called on his English-speaking friend, Pablo Bardin, vice president of Argentina's inter-American institute of economics, and the interview continued.

Sort of a Marathon Race, 14,000 Miles

Seems that the North American mission of Senors Borgonovo and Bardin is twofold. They are primarily interested in testing our appetite for the 1942 Pan American games, but they are also here to interest American autoists in entering a stock car road race from Washington to Buenos Aires in the fall of 1942. That will be a little 14,000-mile dash leading first to St. Louis, then down through Fort Worth, Austin, Nueva Laredo and down the Pan American Highway as far as it reaches beyond Mexico City, then by boat 300 miles to La Guira, the Port of Caracas, thence through Venezuela, Ecuador, Colombia, Peru, Bolivia, Chile and across the Andes to Argentina.

The enthusiastic Argentine Automobile Club, which sponsors many stock car races in order to stress the necessity of better roads in South America, would like to start the race 31 days before Columbus Day, figuring that it will take the winner that long to reach Buenos Aires from the District of Columbia. However, our friends from South America tell us that an irritating but not very important event may delay the start.

"It's Ecuador and Peru," Senor Bardin explained. "They fight. War. Nobody know why. Not even Ecuador and Peru. They don't even use gun. They t'row o-ranges, that's about all. It will delay the race, we're fear, maybe two weeks."

Pre Pan American Olympics Plans

We had some trouble getting the boys to leave the race and concentrate on the Pan American Olympics. But Borgonovo, after explaining that only passenger cars with hard tops would be eligible for the 14,000-mile clank to Buenos Aires, got along with the Olympic story.

Twenty-one American republics are so interested in the games that they have agreed, some by Government decree, to participate. U. S. A. A. U. and Olympic officials assured the good will ambassadors last week that America would send a team of at least 300 to the games. In all, from 1500 to 2000 North, Central and South American athletes will participate. Borgonovo and Bardin have raised more than two million pesos for the erection of the necessary sports stadiums, etc.

Bardin told us that the Pan American winter Olympics will be held in the wintry Province of Mendoza in late August, 1942, mid-winter in the Andes. The regular games will begin November 20, 1942, and end December 6—spring in Buenos Aires.

Veteran Wins N. American Shoot Honors

By the Associated Press

Vandalia, Ohio, Aug. 19.—Russ Elliott, of Raytown, Mo., tall, 42-year-old shooting park operator, won the North American clay target championship today at the Grand American Trap Shoot, defeating Ed V. (Ted) Ross, of Millersport, Ohio, 48 to 47, in a shoot-off after they had tied at 199 of 200 in the regular event.

The professional championship went to Clyde B. Wells, of Bridgeport, Conn., with 199 of 200, but the women's race wound up in a three-way tie which will be shot off early Wednesday.

Mrs. Bunny Sanders, of Keyser, W. Va., cracked 98 of 100 to beat about 20 other feminine State queens in their first "champion of champions" race for women, and Jimmy Robinson, of Minneapolis, trapshooting editor for Sports Afield Magazine, grabbed the first national sports writers title with 48 of 50.

In the men's "champion of champions" classic, four State titleholders romped through the 100-target event without a miss. They were Frank W. Smythe, of Memphis, Tenn.; H. L. Cheek, of Clinton, Ind.; Walter Beaver, of Conshohocken, Pa., and Karl Maust, of Columbus, Ohio.

Smythe missed the sixth target, and Beaver the thirtieth in the shoot off, while Maust and Cheek went through 75 straight to remain tied when darkness called a halt.

J. R. Hall, of Alexandria, Va., finished in a tie for eighth place in the champion of champions race limited only to State titleholders in the tournament. Cawood Oliver, of Washington, D. C., firing in the same event, was well down the list with a 91.

Mrs. Nell, Mrs. Cramer Lead Manor Ladies' Golf

Mrs. J. E. Nell and Mrs. J. W. Cramer deadlocked for net honors during yesterday's ladies' day play at Manor Country Club, each with 81. Mrs. Nell elected to take the gross prize with 93. Low-putt prize for the day went to Mrs. J. W. Powell, with 29.

Browns, Bosox Split on 9th Inning Rallies

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 19.—The Boston Red Sox lost a pitchers' duel, 3 to 2, and then won a slugfest, 10 to 7, in dividing a double-header with the St. Louis Browns today in games decided by ninth-inning rallies.

Ted Williams, Boston's slugger, hit three home runs during the afternoon, giving him a total of 26 for the season.

The second game offered a contrast in managerial handling of pitchers. Joe Cronin yanked Earl Johnson, Boston's starting pitcher, when he lost control in the fourth, although he had not allowed a hit. Luke Sewell, however, let Bob Muncrief hang on until the ninth while the Red Sox hammered him for 17 hits. They added two more off his successors.

Poland, Blunt Start Drills For 25-Rounder August 27

By Tony Neri

Bill Poland and Eddie Blunt, who will meet in the 25-round feature bout next Wednesday night at the ball park, began training at Turner's Arena here yesterday. The match will headline a 67-round calvacade of boxing.

Poland, under the astute handling of Jack Kearns, has compiled a remarkable record of 32 knockout victories in 36 professional fights. He has yet to meet defeat. The good-looking Jewish heavyweight from the Bronx is 23 years old and weighs 197 pounds, has been boxing for three and a half years.

Poland was accompanied by Ben Morez, Kearns' Ukrainian giant from New York. Morez is 7 feet tall and weighs 286 pounds. Although built on the lines of Primo Carnera, Morez appears much faster and agile than Primo. The Ukrainian is to meet Jabo Kenner, undefeated local Negro heavyweight, in a six-rounder.

Stepped Harry Bobo

Poland's most notable win was scored over Harry Bobo in Baltimore June 26 when he knocked out the Pittsburgh Negro in the eighth round. He also has kayoed Danny Hassett and Jack Marshall. His toughest fight was against Al Delaney.

In yesterday's opening session at the arena, Poland and Morez limited their drills to shadow boxing and a couple of rounds on the heavy bag. They will train daily until next Monday.

Kearns, who is copromoting the fight with Joe Turner, calls Poland the coming champion. He even rates the Yiddish boy on a par with Jack Dempsey as a puncher. Kearns handled Dempsey in the golden era of boxing.

The Morez-Kenner match may steal the coming show. Both fighters are big and rugged, and in the short six-round bout one of 'em probably will be knocked out.

Eddie Blunt, conqueror of Buddy Baer, Abe Simon and Tony Musto, has lost but one fight in six years of campaigning. He was stopped by Lem Franklin in Chicago about a year ago. In his last fight Blunt beat Babe Hunt.

The North Carolina Negro has fought the leading heavyweights except Joe Louis, Billy Conn, and Lou Nova. His manager, Abe Kettler, has been after the threesome for a fight, but claims they want no part of Blunt. In the Musto bout, the 216-pound colored battler knocked out his opponent in the seventh round, while it took Louis nine.

The 25-round limit suits Blunt. He was saying yesterday that the longer the route the better he liked it. "I generally get my second wind in the last round of a 15-round fight and see no reason why I can't go 25," Blunt asserted.

Marlboro Track Opens 10-Day Race Meet at 2 P. M. Today

1000 Horses Ready For Inaugural

D. C. Stars Numerous As Maryland Fall Season Enters Second Lap; Scocca to Ride

By Clocker Mike

The second lap of Maryland's fall racing season will be ushered in at 2 p. m. today at the nearby Marlboro half-mile track. It promises to be a record-making meeting in every sense of the word; that is, if the weather man deals kindly with the Southern Maryland Agricultural Fair Association's sport.

Quartered at Marlboro, or the nearby Bowie track, are more than 1000 horses. Among them are practically every winner during recent weeks at Charles Town, Hagerstown, Belair and Cumberland. In addition, quite a few horses that won at Delaware Park, are also awaiting a chance to go postward.

The Marlboro meeting is especially interesting to Washingtonians, due to more than 100 horses being owned or trained by residents of the Nation's Capital. In addition, Danny Scocca, of this city, present riding sensation of Maryland's smaller ovals, will don silks at the ancient half-mile plant in southern Maryland.

Marlboro's sport will run 10 days. The windup is set for Saturday, August 30. During that time numerous sprint and distance features well as formful. This in a measure will be due to General Manager Joseph A. Farrell limiting all fields to eight starters. Readers of The Washington Post who intend to wager at Marlboro, will do well to lean a bit toward thoroughbreds that have shown a fondness in the past for muddy or heavy tracks.

This tip is passed along because Marlboro's track contains a thick sandy surface. While it makes for slower run races, it insures horses from breaking down, which after all, is something to be thankful for.

All finishes at Marlboro will be photographed. All winners, as well as any other horses selected by the stewards must undergo saliva tests. This is being done so that turfites will be given every possible protection.

The Bahr stall starting gate will be used by Bill Schamerhorn to dispatch all fields. It will be Schamerhorn's initial appearance at Marlboro, but judging by his work during the recent session at Hagerstown, genial and efficient Bill will please race goers.

J. Donald Hay, director of wagering at Marlboro, is predicting $125,000 daily average. Hay, who served as boss of wagering at Cumberland, predicted a $120,000 average, only to see his totalizator crew handle slightly over $138,000 daily. Here's hoping he does even bettter during Marlboro's ten-day session.

MARLBORO MUSINGS—Don't look for the Marlboro plant to be as elaborate as Belair or Cumberland . . . It's a comfy, homey plant and as it always sees a big percentmore can you expect? . . . If you age of favorites winning, what miss Walter (Bill Bennings) Haight, remember he has only gone West with the Redskins for a few weeks.

Fenelon Wins Whitney at Saratoga

Scores by 3 Lengths Over Big Pebble; Welcome Pass Third

By the Associated Press

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 19. William Woodward's Fenelon, showing appreciation of a big pull in the weights, scored an easy three-length triumph over the heavily burdened Big Pebble, from the Circle "M" Ranch stable of the Edward S. Moores, in this fourteenth Whitney Stakes before 9309 fans here today. After a sudden heavy shower, which started just before the race and left the track sloppy, Fenelon went out and led virutally from the break to earn an even $5000 in purse money.

Big Pebble, hero of the Widener and Hollywood Gold Cups, was second by a length and a half over W. E. Boeing's Welcome Pass. Abbe Pierre was fourth, while Andy K., the only other starter, reverted to an old trait of his, running out approaching the first turn. He continued so wide that Jockey Nick Wall just let him gallop along, far out of contention.

The winner, adding this stake to his Brooklyn and Merchants and Citizens Handicaps successes this season, was a 4-to-5 favorite and was timed in 2:06 2-5 for the mile and a quarter.

This event created more interest in next Saturday's $7500 added mile and a quarter Saratoga Handicap, for which all in today's field except Welcome Pass have been named. In the coming fixture, Fenelon will be asked to concede 4 pounds to Big Pebble. As the Bel Air Bullet carried 120 to Big Pebble's 130 this afternoon, there will be a shift of 14 pounds in favor of the Pebble on Saturday.

4-5 Shot Gets Away On Top to Take Down Purse Before 9,309

Big Pebble was kept much closer to the pace than usual in the Whitney. Except for being temporarily passed by Welcome Pass around the last bend, the Moore horse was closest on Fenelon's trail. However, Fenelon never was in danger as he breezed along, tossing slop in his rivals' faces.

Grid Dodgers Lose Shetley, Star Back

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 19 (AP).—Coach Jock Sutherland learned for the first time today that his football Dodgers will have to get along without the services of Rhoten Shetley, first-string quarterback.

Shetley, former Furman back, is now in the United States Army at Fort Bragg, N. C. The loss of Shetley left Sutherland with only four backs out of the 13 with which the Dodgers finished the National League campaign last fall.

Three Percent Wins as Favored Silvestra Fails

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—Mrs. Willie Crump's Three Percent ran to a smashing victory in the Bonnie Scotland Purse at Washington Park today as the favored Woolford Farm's Silvestra finished a miserable seventh in the eight-horse race.

Three Percent, which ran as a $1500 claimer in the spring, has improved steadily the past several weeks. It was his fifth victory in 11 starts this season.

N. Y. Realty Market Also Enjoys Boom

The New York real estate market, rated by experts as the greatest in the Nation, is experiencing a substantial pickup as the result of floor space demands by Federal departments and private concerns with defense contracts, renting agents here said yesterday.

New leasings have cut down materially the vacant areas in the Wall Street district. Army and Navy staff additions are being quartered there, it was reported, because of insufficient space in Washington.

So far, according to a survey, more than 500,000 square feet has been taken, a considerable part in the financial district.

Additions to the Army and Navy staffs being made at the Federal Building at 90 Church Street were expected to involve complete occupancy of the 1,000,000 square feet of the 15-story structure, forcing other tenants to seek accommodations elsewhere.

In addition scores of apartments and residential units in Gotham are being rented by Government officials and employes moving from Washington.

Woodward Dividends Voted

Directors of Woodward & Lothrop, local department store, have declared regular quarterly dividends as follows: 50 cents a share on common stock, $1.75 a share on preferred stock. Both dividends are payable September 27 to holders of record September 16.

For the 32-week period since the beginning fo the year, retail advertising in the 83 cities is reported as 623,944,341 lines, up 4.5 per cent from last year's comparable total of 597,350,550 lines.

Army Patterns Post Buying On Chain Stores

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 19.—The United States Army today was lining up a central buying organization here which would pattern its operations after the buying methods used by chain store and other commercial organizations.

Establishment of the office marked a departure from the traditional method of buying supplies for Army exchanges at Army posts and cantonments to supply soldiers with candy, cigarettes, shaving materials and other items not included in the regular Army issue.

The office is under the supervision of Col. Frank Mansfield, who has had experience with the operation of post exchanges in the Panama Canal Zone and other Army districts. Assisting in the management of the office is a special post exchange advisoryy committee, with K. D. Gardner, chain store executive, as chairman.

The volume of business done by post exchanges is estimated at around 250 million dollars annually.

According to a survey made by Gardner's committee in a tour of Army camps, the fastest moving items in the post exchanges are soft drinks and beer. Second in importance are cigarettes. Candy bars, toilet articles, stationery and novelties follow in the order named.

Stocks Drift Irregularly in Light Deals; Motor, Amusement Shares Buoyant

New York, Aug. 19.—It was another photographic finish for the stock market today as leaders generally emerged with minor gains and losses about evenly balanced.

Reluctance to extend Monday's slow-going rally was in evidence at the start. There were a few strong spots as well as weak ones, but fractional variations either way ruled at the close.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 43.0. Of 638 individual issues traded—about half the number listed on the exchange—228 were up, 221 down and 189 unchanged. Dealings were sluggish throughout. Transfers of 390,340 shares were among the smallest for a full session this year. They comapred with 404,760 the day before.

Business hopes buoyed a number of favorites but the market as a whole, brokers said, was handicapped by more pessimistic German-Russian war news and fears of untoward happenings out of the rift between the United States and Japan. Taxes and Federal restraints also remained as speculative barriers.

Motors did better as manufacturers felt the use of substitutes for materials commandeered by defense works might enable them to maintain production at higher levels than some had expected.

Paramount Pictures, Loew's and Scheniey went into new peak territory for 1941. Amusements were aided by reports of a seasonal pickup in box office receipts.

Rails held setbacks to minor amounts as July revenues for Class 1 roads registered sharp improvement over the same month last year.

Stocks ending on the up side included Lehigh Valley Coal preferred, American Can, General Motors, Chrysler, Consolidated Edison, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, J. I. Case, Boeing, United Aircraft, Cerro de Pasco, duPont, Standard Oil (N. J.), Texas Corporation, and Union Carbide.

Helping the day's volume was the turnover of Commonwealth & Southern, Continental Motors and several other low-priced shares in relatively large blocks. Most of these were unchanged to off a shade.

In the losing division were United States Steel, Bethlehem, American Telephone, United States Rubber, Douglas Aircraft, Glenn Martin, Western Union, Santa Fe, Anaconda, American Smelting, Eastman Kodak, and Westinghouse.

Standard Oil (Ohio) dropped 1⅞ coincident with announcement of underwriters that stabilization had been withdrawn from a recent large over-the-counter offering of this stock.

In a listless Curb, advances were retained by Brewster Aero. McWilliams Dredging, Phoenix Securities and Todd Shipyards. In arrears were Glen Alden Coal, Bell Aircraft and Columbia Oil & Gas. Trading here amounted to about 65,000 shares versus 66,000 yesterday.

Rails and industrials leaned to the off side in today's bond market while other principal groups steered a steady course with trading light in all departments.

Gains of small fractions to more than a point in a number of Latin-American issues featured an otherwise irregular foreign dollar list. Included in the advancing contingent were Uruguay adjust 3¾s at 48½, Mexican 4s of '45 at 6¼, Haiti 6s at 36¼, Colombia 6s at 63¾, and Argentine 4s at 66¼. On the down side were, among others, Copenhagen 5s, Milan 6½s and Norway 4½s.

U. S. Governments moved narrowly on both the stock exchange and over the counter with the trend mixed on both markets.

World Sugar Leads Staples In New Bulge

By the Associated Press

Futures prices of major commodities moved higher yesterday, world sugar advancing sharply in a broad buying movement.

A variety of factors influenced the markets. Sugar took its cue from the purchase of Cuban raw supplies by a British group at 1.75 cents a pound, up .10 cent a pound from a previous sale, and closed .12 to .15 of a cent higher.

At Chicago, wheat closed ⅛ to ⅝ cent a bushel higher after profit taking cut off some early gains. Corn lost ground.

Wool tops advanced .4 to .6 of a cent a pound in trade buying that followed announcement consumption was at a record level.

Quota worries weighed down coffee futures prices. Santos quotations dropped .06 to .14 of a cent a pound and Rio lost a shade.

Spot commodity increases that followed the futures advance moved the Associated Press index of 35 cash staples up to 90.87 per cent of the 1926 average from 90.37 per cent the day before.

The magazine's investigators said hard training whetted the soldiers' appetites for ice cream.

July consumption was 68,653 long tons, compared with the record June figure of 84,912 tons. July, however, was 42 per cent higher than the 48,354 tons used in the like 1940 month.

U. S. Seen Ready To Hike Output Of Army Tanks

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—Use of thousands of tanks in the war between Germany and Russia has convinced U. S. military authorities that America's tank production should be stepped up sharply, an article in the magazine American Machinist, said today.

Present plans call for construction of medium tanks at a rate of 1,000 a month by July 1, 1942, the article said.

The magazine said that because of material shortages the possibility of such a speed-up appeared doubtful; temporary shortages seemed likely to become even more acute.

Rough estimates said the new tank program would call for 3,000 to 4,000 more machine tools. The magazine said Chrysler, Baldwin, and American Locomotive would be the builders of the medium tanks and much work would be farmed out to smaller manufacturers.

Reserve Index For Industry Rises to 162

By the Associated Press

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that the high level of industrial production caused by the defense program had been maintained throughout July and the first half of August.

The board's seasonally adjusted index of production, however, rose from 157 in June to 162 in July. July was rated higher because in normal years industry slackens in that month. The July index figure, which represents a percentage of the 1935-39 average, compared with 121 in July, 1940.

In July, the board said, automobile and steel production fell off somewhat, but activity in the machinery, aircraft, shipbuilding and lumber industries increased.

Output of copper and other nonferrous metals was steady. High output also was maintained in the wool, cotton and rayon textile industries and also in the shoe industry. Production of chemicals rose somewhat, but output of manufactured foods increased less than seasonally expected.

Crude petroleum production remained at a high rate, but coal output declined slightly. Construction contracts also increased.

July Construction Heaviest in 12 Years

New York, Aug. 19 (AP).—F. W. Dodge Corporation, statistical service, reported today construction contracts awarded during July in the 37 Eastern States totaled $377,392,000, most for any July since 1929.

Public ownership construction accounted for much of the July nonresidential building, the service reported, while 74 per cent of the residential figure, or $152,484, was for private ownership.

Soviet Starts Flow of Gold For U. S. Arms

By the Associated Press

Russian gold started flowing to the United States last week, apparently to pay for war purchases.

The Commerce Department reported imports of $3,467,235 of gold from Russia in the week ended August 13. Officials could recall only two other shipments of Russian gold arriving in this country in the last several years.

Although Russia is one of the principal gold producers in the world, it has heretofore either hoarded its gold, or sold it elsewhere. Although the amount of Russian gold stocks is unknown, officials here have said they were probably large enough to enable the Russians to pay cash for war supplies for some time.

The Russian shipment swelled total gold imports during the week to $10,834,588, the largest total for several years. Principal other shipments included $3,231,276 from Canada and $2,225,127 from Colombia.

Foreign gold deposits under earmark in the Federal Reserve Banks remained unchanged at $1,963,725,148.

Silver imports amounted to $892,939, including $707,365 from Mexico and $70,556 from Canada.

Gold exports were $493, and silver exports were $149,197.

Egg Prices Spurt 1.5c a Dozen on Light Arrivals

Chicago, Aug. 19 (AP).—Egg prices advanced 1½ cents a dozen today to the highest levels for the month of August since 1929.

Fresh graded extra firsts in Chicago rose from 27½ to 29 cents a dozen, a new seasonal high level, while futures climbed 40 points to 30 cents a dozen.

Traders said the upturn was due to the shortage of fresh eggs in relation to demand. Arrivals from current production were the smallest reported for any day this season nad withdrawals from storage exceeded those of a year ago.

Butter futures borrowed strength from eggs, advancing 30 to 35 points to 35.35 for the November contracts and 35.40 for December. Cheese futures also shared the advance.

The 1941 half year net included $273,508 profit realized from sale of Bank of America stock.

ARE YOU NEGLIGENT?

Many people visit your home during one day. On the face of things these folks are all friendly to you, until the day you forget to remove the kiddies' wagon, the babies' go-cart or sand the icy walk, or your maid trips on the loose step and falls, or your dog bites a neighbor's child. Thus friendly relations cease, and you stand to lose even your home.

Bloodworth's Homer Beats Indians, 8-6

it to Archie for a force out at third. With the bulge in the Indians' pitching order at bat, he got out of the inning nicely, retiring Heath on a short fly to Case and striking out Grimes.

In fact, Kennedy retired the last 11 men to face him in order—in order to win the game, among other things.

The Indians didn't get a man on base against him in any of the three extra innings, and he struck out three.

After Heath's homer with two on set the Indians up in a lead in the first inning, the Tribe got a gift run from the Nats in the second, when Archie's wild throw pulled Vernon off the bag. The Nats got back into the game in the third when they came up with a run on Bloodworth's single to right, Evans' double to center and Case's infield hit. The first of the Indians' four double plays limited the rally to one run.

The parade of two-baggers resumed in the sixth when Case and Cramer opened up with a pair of doubles against Dean. Lewis got one run home with a single to left, and it seemed that the Nats were in for a big inning when Mack muffed Travis' double-play grounder with none out, Cramer scoring and Lewis taking third. But Vernon popped up and the Indians' fourth double play in consecutive innings stopped the rally.

Their lead cut to 4-3, the Indians immediately went out and got two runs back in their own half of the sixth against Zuber. Pitcher Dean drove the runs home with a single against the right to field wall, and the Indians were in front, 6-3.

From there on, the Nats battled up hill. Bloodworth opened the seventh with a double off the wall in right and Evans promptly scored him with a double to left, but the Nats got only one run out of that inning.

In the eighth, two more doubles—by Travis and Archie—produced only one run, Evans eventually striking out with the bases full. But in the ninth Case and Lewis produced the tying run, and eventually in the twelfth Vernon walked and Bloodworth broke up the ball game, or had you heard?

Griffs Eying Fifth Place; Carrasquel Ill

Cleveland, Aug. 19.—The Nats are making a serious sort of pitch for fifth place, it is apparent tonight. Today's victory over the Cleveland Indians, their third straight, elevated the Nats a full game out of the cellar, left them only one game behind the sixth-place Philadelphia Athletics, and moved them to within three games of the Detroit Tigers.

Manager Bucky Harris' team within the past three weeks has been playing the best ball of any second-division club, and is outhitting all teams except the Red Sox in team averages. Harris is now visualizing a fifth-place finish for his club.

Tomorrow, though, the Nats' manager may be up against it in an attempt to sweep the three-game series with the Indians here. Alex Carrasquel, owner of a six-game winning streak, and actually unbeaten in his last eight starts in two seasons, reported ill tonight and may not be available tomorrow.

Carrasquel is suffering from a mild stomach ailment, but will get the pitching job if he recovers. Otherwise, Harris may turn to big Arnold Anderson for his first starting job of the year. He is saving Dutch Leonard and Sid Hudson for a scheduled double-header against the Tigers on Thursday. POVICH.

Drake allowed only two hits in six stanzas—each a double and each with two out. Then, with two out again, in the seventh, Frank Gustine hit his second two-bagger, stole third and scored on a wild throw by Harry Lavagetto. In the eighth, Arky Vaughan opened with a pinch single and scored on a triple by Bob Elliott.

This excited the Dodgers to drastic action and they batted around against Heintzelman. Mickey Owen walked and Walker doubled him to third. With two out, Pete Reiser struck at the first two pitches and finally slammed a double into left for two runs, to put Brooklyn ahead.

Sammy Baugh 'Discovered' By Haight

bur Moore over there? He's a pip of a wing back. Watch him this season." That was the start of Baugh's buck passing.

From there in, between every third question, he was praising some other player. Before our talk was over I was liking this Baugh so much that I was convinced that he was at least a first cousin of the Wilkens family.

From Baugh and General Manager Jack Espey, who sees all and knows all a la Redskin, I learned the following facts about the lanky Texan:

He is (1) a pro football player, (2) a rancher, (3) a movie actor. He didn't have any trouble making that movie and may make another one when the season closes. Played on first football team at age of 10 at Temple, Tex. He was 85-pound end on fourth-grade school team.

Would rather kick ball than pass it and gets more satisfaction out of 65-yard punt, well placed, than a completed pass of like distance. Incidentally, he led the league in kicking, as well as passing, last year. Baugh has never caught a pass since he has played with the Redskins and he has scored only one touchdown. That was in the closing stages of a one-sided Redskin victory. And, despite his Texas raising, Baugh never wore a ten-gallon hat until the day he signed his first contract with the Redskins.

2,762-ACRE ESTATE

He doesn't call Sweetwater, Tex., his home town any more. Sold his ranch there and now has 2,762 acres at Rotan, Tex. Never got a sore arm throwing a football but has had several lame ones as the result of trying to pitch baseball. He uses own judgment in picking receiver of pass. Likes this better than having a designated player.

Despite the nursery rhyme, "Baugh, Baugh, black sheep, etc.," he raises only cattle on his ranch. (The typewriter just yelled, "What a lousy pun, you fat son of a gun.")

But speaking of fat, I'm glad we will soon be getting off this train. I like the Redskin players and in a short while I have gotten to know them. But every time I come through the aisle they give me a friendly poke in the tummy. Now I get that around home. The children slap me playfully. But these Redskins—well, anyway, Boss, they say I'm a jolly fellow and they like me.

Always your ace,
POUNDS HAIGHT.

P. S.—What is a tail back?

Altogether Detroit made 16 hits. In the second game the Yanks retaliated with a 16-hit offensive of their own, including homers by Tom Henrich and Joe Gordon, and Lefty Marius Russo coasted easily to his twelfth victory by spacing ten Detroit blows. He allowed no runs till the seventh.

Louis and Wife Plan Honeymoon

that way, he said; he thought it was a complete reconciliation, with no strings attached.

Cyrus said, well, if there was a misunderstanding Joe and Marva might go into chambers and talk it over alone, and they did, and the photographers made their preparations, and pretty soon Joe and Marva came out and clinched, and the cameras snapped, and then Joe momentarily and dramatically swept Mrs. Barrow into his arms and carried her from the hearing room.

Marva charged cruelty in her divorce bill, filed July 3, declaring Joe struck her on two different occasions. Her petition for alimony of $200 per week set Joe's annual income at $250,000 a figure which Joe declared was almost $200,000 too high.

But all that was water over the dam tonight, and 'twas all sweetness and light at 4065 South Michigan Boulevard.

Ward, Billows Win Matches At Chicago

By International News Service

Chicago, Aug. 19.—Marvin (Bud) Ward of Spokane, Wash, winner of the Western Amateur in 1940 and this year, and Ray Billows, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., tonight turned in early in preparation for their re-enactment of the finals of the 1939 amateur championship which Ward won.

They set the stage for the encore by winning their second round matches in the inaugural of the Great Lakes Amateur tournament over the Knollwood Country Club course today, Ward defeating Johnny Lehman, of Chicago, 5 and 4, and Billows conquering Earl "Bud" Stewart, of Dallas, Tex., national intercollegiate champion, by the same margin.

Ward whipped Billows in the National Final over the course of Chicago's North Shore Club in '39, but last year Billows gained revenge when they met again in the quarterfinals of the same tournament at the Winged Foot Club, Mamaroneck, N. Y., and eliminated the defending champion.

The draw pairs these golfing rivals tomorrow:

Webb-Brown Bout Put Off a Day

Pittsburgh, Aug. 19 (AP).—Rain today caused postponement for the second straight night of a ten-round fight between Light Heavyweights Jimmy Webb, of Houston, Tex., and Mose Brown, McKeesport Negro. The bout was rescheduled for tomorrow night—weather permitting.

Brown scored an upset two-round knockout victory over Webb in their first meeting and tumbled the Houston boy temporarily out of the running for the leight heavy title vacated by Billy Conn.

Mount Rainier Approves New Street Names

New street names for Mt. Rainier as proposed by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, have been approved by the town council, Mayor Floyd B. Mathias announced yesterday.

The street renaming program will require 14 changes in the names of streets running east and west, he said. No changes are contemplated in north-south streets, which are extensions of District thoroughfares.

According to Mathias, a general renumbering program for homes in the Mt. Rainier area will be required.

The Hyattsville town council approved new street names for Hyattsville at a meeting Monday night. The approval reversed an earlier stand of the council, which had refused to accept the new names when they were submitted by the planning commission two weeks ago.

Mathias also said yesterday that Roy T. Fowkes, municipal engineer for Mt. Rainier, has been instructed to advertise for bids for the construction of sidewalks on Grape Street as far as Mt. Rainier High School and the repaving of Ash and Beech Streets.

A vacant lot at the corner of Otis Street and Rhode Island Avenue has been made into a playground for Mt. Rainier children, according to Mathias. Two lots at the lower end of Valley Avenue have also been converted into a playground.

He said the house was entered with a key through the kitchen door.

Theft of a camera and clothing valued at $159 from his automobile, parked on Fifteenth Street between Pennsylvania Avenue and E Streets Northwest, was reported by Lawrence L. Sweetser, of Orono, Me.

Unselfish cooperation being the thing that's important for our national defense, you should know that five pretty well known orchestra leaders take part as ordinary musicians—without any billing or anything of the sort, mind you—in the CBS-WJSV Wednesday night broadcasts dedicated to the selling of defense bonds and stamps.

That's the "Treasury Hour—Millions for Defense" program, heard at 8 p. m. and in the string section of Al Goodman's Orchestra for each of the broadcasts appear:

Waldo Mayo, who's been heard coast to coast these many years as the conductor for the "Major Bowes Capitol Family Hour."

Nat Brusfloff, who's the musical director for the "Kate Smith Hour," as well as the quiz show, "Double or Nothing."

Johnny Augustine, whose band has been heard over the networks from any number of night spots and who lately has been musical director on "Take It or Leave It."

Kel Murray, who has been heard for many months as the director of CBS's "Let's Dance" series.

Irving Prager, who directs the music for "Let's Pretend" and other network shows.

They go in for harmony both literally and figuratively.

Contract Bridge

Speaking of finesses and face cards, here are a few apt questions from contributors on these points:

The first from J. M. C. says:

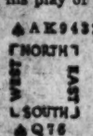
"Sitting north as declarer with entries to either hand, I held this combination:

"How should I play so as to take the most number of tricks?"

With four cards of the suit, including the king outstanding, North should finesse. Leading the jack, not a small spade, is his best bet. This is a safety play, which will lose him no more than one trick unless East holds the four missing cards, in which case J. M. C. must lose two tricks, no matter how he plays. If East is void, however, North can win four spade tricks by taking two finesses.

This play loses when East holds a singleton king, but that is a rare occurrence.

J. M. C. asks a second question concerning his play of this holding:



North will lose a trick by cashing his ace, king, queen of spades if either adversary holds all four missing cards. It is impossible to prevent East from taking a trick if West is void, but if East holds the take six cards. He has but to cash take six cards. He has gut to cash his spade queen, discovering the 4-0 break, and then finesse twice through West's jack, ten holding.

"I know a two-bid is forcing to game," writes A. H., who had a hand resembling Fishbein's, "but what about this slightly different situation? The bidding goes:

North	East	South	West
3 ♢	Double	?	—

"Is North still compelled to bid?"

The double releases South of the necessity to bid the first round. However, unless a penalty double is made by his partner at the next opportunity, South must either double or continue bidding until game is reached.
